PAN,
FRONTISPIECE TO THE FORTY-THIRD VOLUME.

Engraved by MR. SCOTT, from a Design of MR. UWINS.

PAN was the god of shepherds, of huntsmen, and of all the inhabitants of the country. He was the son of Mercury, by Dryope, according to Homer. Some give him Jupiter and Callisto for parents, others Jupiter and Ybis or Oneis. Lucian, Hyginus, &c. support that he was the son of Mercury and Penelope, the daughter of Icarius, and that the god gained the affections of the princess under the form of a goat, as she tended her father's flocks on mount Taygetus, before her marriage with the king of Ithaca. Some authors maintain that Penelope became mother of Pan, during the absence of Ulysses in the Trojan war, and that he was the offspring of all the suitors that frequented the palace of Penelope, whence he received the name of Pan, which signifies all or every thing. Pan was a monster in appearance, he had two small horns on his head, his complexion was ruddy, his nose flat, and his legs, thighs, tail, and feet, were those of a goat. The education of Pan was entrusted to a nymph of Arcadia, called Sinoe, but the nurse, according to Homer, terrified at the sight of such a monster,

monster, fled away and left him. He was wrapped up in the skin of beasts by his father, and carried to heaven, where Jupiter and the gods long entertained themselves with the oddity of his appearance. Bacchus was greatly pleased with him, and gave him the name of Pan. The god of shepherds chiefly resided in Arcadia, where the woods and the most rugged mountains were his habitation. He invented the flute with seven reeds, which he called Syrinx, in honour of a beautiful nymph of the same name, to whom he attempted to offer violence, and who was changed into a reed. He was continually employed in deceiving the neighbouring nymphs, and often with success. Though deformed in his shape and features, yet he had the good fortune to captivate Diana, and of gaining her favour, by transforming himself into a beautiful white goat. He was also enamoured of a nymph of the mountains called Echo, by whom he had a son called Lynx. He also paid his addresses to Omphale, queen of Lydia, but did not succeed in his suit. The worship of Pan was well established, particularly in Arcadia, where he gave oracles on mount Lycæus. His festivals, called by the Greeks Lycæa, were brought to Italy by Evander, and they were well known at Rome by the name of the Lupercalia.

The worship, and the different functions of Pan, are derived from the mythology of the ancient Egyptians. This god was one of the eight great gods of the Egyptians, who ranked before the other twelve gods, whom the Romans called Consentes. He was worshipped with the greatest solemnity all over Egypt. His statues represented him as a goat, not because he was really such, but this was done for mysterious reasons. He was the emblem of fecundity, and they looked upon him as the principle of all things. His horns, as some observe, represented the rays of the sun, and the brightness of the heavens was expressed by the vivacity and the ruddiness of his complexion. The star which he wore on his breast, was the symbol of the firmament, and his hairy legs and feet denoted the inferior parts of the earth, such as the woods and plants. Some suppose that he appeared as a goat, because when the gods fled into Egypt, in their war against the giants, Pan transformed himself into a goat, an example which was immediately followed by all the deities. Pan, according to some, is the same as Faunus, and he is the chief of all the Satyrs. Plutarch mentions, that in the reign of Tiberius, an extraordinary voice was heard near the Echinades in the Ionian sea, which exclaimed, that the great Pan was dead. This was readily believed by the emperor, and the astrologers were consulted, but they were unable to explain the meaning of so supernatural a voice, which probably proceeded from the imposition of one of the courtiers who attempted to terrify Tiberius. In Egypt, in the town of Mendes, which word also signifies a goat, there was a sacred goat kept with the greatest ceremonious sanctity. The death of this animal was always attended with the greatest solemnities, and like that of another Apis, became the cause of an universal mourning. As Pan usually terrified the inhabitants of the neighbouring country, that kind of fear which often seizes men, and which is only ideal and imaginary, has received from him him the name of panic fear. This kind of terror has been exemplified not only in individuals, but in numerous armies, such as that of Brennus, which was thrown into the greatest consternation at Rome, without any cause or plausible reason.——[Lempriere's Classical Dictionary.]

ON THE COMPARATIVE SPEED OF RACE HORSES OF THE PRESENT AND FORMER DAYS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

I Cannot resist expressing my sentiments after being so pointedly called upon by VIATOR, "to assign some plausible and convincing cause for that superior fleetness" which I have shewn in a former account. Your correspondent must be aware that it is impossible, within the compass of this letter, to define a correct system of training, because it has of late years undergone many changes and much refinement. Suffice it to say, that our present system is considered truly scientific, and was never before brought to such a pitch of perfection, although it was formerly more plain and free from mystery. Of the exact truth of what your correspondent next asserts, I cannot decide; but it is well known that the race horse for the last thirty years has been bred to a considerable size, and no doubt with more ability and strength to carry weight with greater ease; for it is very common at Newmarket to see three-years-old colts that formerly carried but 8st. now carry for the same stakes, 8st. 7lb. and thereby shewing that a race is not decided solely with superior speed, unless attended by strength likewise.—It must be admitted that some years ago excess of training was very prevalent, and by that means crippling their powers of speed before they attained sufficient strength to undergo that violent exercise. But now the case is widely different, for no horse, as a qualification for starting, is rattled off his legs in training, through the judicious influence of a few spirited individuals. Chifney's opinion merits serious consideration from all lovers of this truly noble animal, for no man has had more practical experience, joined with great knowledge of their powers; yet in some places he has carried his theory too far, particularly in his jockeyship; nevertheless he has treated of it in a masterly manner. Mr. Lawrence asserts, that Chifney did not look deep enough when he attributed the denegeracy and defects of our racing cattle solely to this cause. But with all deference to Mr. L.'s superior judgment, I still think that Chifney is in some measure right, although I will not go the whole way with him and accord implicitly to his opinion, till I see proofs, so difficult to be obtained, to put the matter beyond all doubt. This opinion likewise presents a fair speculation to all breeders of this animal, and if attended with partial success, as I see no reason to doubt, although the effect of this experiment will be held in great doubt for some years, it must contribute in the long run greatly to the improvement of speed in our racers. I agree with VIATOR that the inferiority of speed proceeds partly from that cause which he ascribes. Still some few exceptions may be started against it, such as the increasing thirst for racing contests—the love of novelty—and the great expence of training horses till they have attained that age. Formerly races were decided in much shorter distances than at present, but now few races are decided under two, three, or four miles, and in this way destroying their powers of superior speed and strength before they attain the age, when we suppose those powers have come to their full perfection; for few horses can stand for any length of time the severe training and bottom required for a four-mile heat. This age has so refined upon racing, that yearlings have started at Newmarket, the bare mention of which startled our forefathers; and well it may, to say nothing of the cruelty of straining their tender nerves in a racing contest, under the excruciating lash of a vigorous jockey; besides commencing to run them at that early age, totally ruins them in a very few years, so as to be withdrawn from the turf, perhaps before their grandsire was brought to the post; but I am happy to say this practice is almost done away with, for the more mild and simple system of our ancestors, combining all that was requisite in this noble pastime. Therefore, I assert that Chifney's and Viator's opinion are the real cause of that inferiority of speed in our racing cattle, and, unless I see some more plausible and convincing cause, for I court discussion, I am right in attributing the inferiority to this sole cause; as a proof of this assertion, no horse of great note has appeared at Newmarket for the last twenty-five or thirty years. I hope some more able and experienced correspondent will bring forward a stronger argument in support of this or any other opinion, and if it appears more convincing than this, I will be the first to concur in it, for too much cannot be said on this most important topic. I shall conclude this letter with an observation of Lord Herbert, of Cherbury, that "A fine man upon a fine horse, is the noblest work of God."—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

P. S. I shall be greatly obliged to you Sir, or any correspondent, who could inform me of the pedigree and performances of either of those celebrated running horses, Seagull or Buzzard.

ON THE SAME SUBJECT.

To H. S.

Sir—I felt some satisfaction at the instance which you pointed out, of a race equal to, if not superior, to most of those contained in my statement; and if I mistake not, you mean to rank Camerton with Coriander, and other famous runners; but if this is your real intention, depend on it, it shews but a superficial acquaintance with the turf. Perhaps you are not aware that the B. C. is little less than four miles and a quarter, and which to a horse hard run in a four mile heat, makes a vast difference. I imagine you don't recollect how easily he was beat by Sprightly at Ascot; and it is needless to point out the many instances when Sprightly was beat. I will admit, that Camerton, as a country plate horse, has but few equals, and no doubt performed the distance in the time specified, but put him in comparison with Truffle, Grimalkin, Phantom, and other good runners, I believe he'd cut a very poor figure. Besides the field of horses horses that started against him were very indifferent, and by beating them so very easy, magnified his speed in the eyes of the spectators, and no doubt in yours, Sir. Don't infer from this that I intend to deny what you assert; on the contrary, I put implicit credit in it; but I mean to say, if you had turned over a few leaves of the Sporting Magazine, you might have seen horses of superior speed to Camerton, and which have performed the distance in a shorter time than what you assert. In 1804, Remembrancer with 7st. 7lb. ran four miles at Doncaster, in seven minutes and fifty seconds; Viscount, in 1813, ran four miles at Doncaster, with 7st. 7lb. in seven minutes and forty-five seconds. Remembrancer was a capital runner, and superior to most horses of his day; Viscount was allowed to be as good a four-years-old as any in the kingdom. Now the query is, that Camerton with 8st. 10lb. performed this distance in much shorter time than Remembrancer and Viscount, both superior runners. The question I confess, perplexes me, but if you can solve it, I shall feel peculiarly gratified. Of the inaccuracy of my statement with respect to Eagle, Tyrant, and Ditto, not having an account by me at present, I cannot decide, but I will go so far as to say, till I see the Calendar, that the account given me and transmitted to the Editor, is correct.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ON THE SAME SUBJECT.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR—Your Correspondent, T. L. B. of Rugby, desires to know what other horses besides Flying Childers, Eclipse, Bay Malton, and Highflyer, have always been successful in running. He must have been strangely misinformed, by his mode of stating the question. Half of those he has named, although capital horses, were not always successful. Highflyer was beaten, when he first started, but before he had acquired the name of Highflyer. He first started, as I recollect, in the name of the Herod colt. As to Bay Malton, he was several times beaten, but must always be esteemed a capital horse, more especially considering the defect in his blood, being a son of Sampson, which was not a thorough-bred horse, although accommodated with a pedigree—at least such was the report of the man who broke him, and had previously led his dam to Blaze to be covered. She appeared a three-part-bred hunting mare, and no one knew her exact pedigree. The question of T. L. B. is rather vague. Many middling horses have been always successful in running, either for sound reasons, or being luckily matched with those which were still lower than the middle. But those have been few indeed, which carried all before them in the style of Childers, Bonny Black, and Eclipse, to which trio, it would probably be difficult to add another. Brocklesby Betty, and Buckhunter, or the Carlisle gelding, were of high fame, in old time. Regulus was never beaten, but he left the course at six years old. Old Snap, Squirrel, Goldfinder, Gimcrack, Mark Antony, Johnny, Shark, Highflyer, Dictator, Dorimant, Rockingham, and others, have left a high character on the turf, but were most of them beaten in their turn, turn, one by the other, as they increased in age, and had more weight to carry, but seldom or never by middling horses.

The timing of such a number of racers, given by your correspondent Z. B. is both curious and valuable, and shews a true zeal for the turf. I am unaware from what source he could draw all these accounts, nor did I recollect that such a number of horses had really been timed. One drawback, however, must occur to him, which is the general uncertainty of such accounts, and the interest which proprietors have in exaggeration. In fact, those are best to be depended on which relate to horses of known superiority, and which have generally distanced their competitors. The accounts which have assigned great performances to middling horses, are not entitled to much credit. Eclipse was never timed by the watch; nor did I ever before hear that Highflyer had been, although I knew that horse well; and I think it scarcely correct that he beat all that ran with him for speed; great stride and stoutness being rather his play. Shark, indeed, I well remember, was equally good for speed and game, beating Fireaway, Masquerade, and all the speediest horses of his day, a single mile; but Masquerade could beat him half a mile, and at the same time the half-bred Rocket gelding beat them all a quarter of a mile. Your other correspondent, Viator, argues very rationally on the cause of the modern inferiority of the race horse, namely, training him before he has arrived at his full strength. It is impossible that perfect action can be attained by an animal, the whole muscular system of which is loosened and debilitated before it has arrived at maturity. Eclipse did not run until five years old.

ON HUMANITY TO ANIMALS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

I Was a good deal surprized that your Correspondent, who signs himself "A Bit of a Jockey," and who, from such a signature, must be supposed not altogether uninformed on other branches of sporting, should never have heard of the old, barbarous, and too common practice of purposely dislocating the joints of deer intended to be hunted, in order that the hounds might have a better chance with them, in point of speed. He need but make inquiry on Windsor or Epping forests, or in any part of the country, where stag-hounds are kept. Or, if he refer to your former volumes, he will find mention of various instances of this kind, so tacked to names of high and illustrious rank, that it is impossible to suppose those great personages unconscious of the contrivance and perpetration of such cruel and cowardly deeds. But persons, whether high or low in rank, attached to hunting, seem to be so thoroughly blinded by custom in these cases, that the latter in particular stare at a man with a stupid face of wonder, who finds fault with these practices, and when conscience and fellow-feeling arise in their breasts, they seem like men awakening from a dream. With respect to their superiors, they preserve a sullen and indignant silence between the shame arising

arising from conviction, and the jealous aversion to any doctrines or changes, the effects of which they suppose might derogate from their prerogative even of doing wrong, and contract the circle of their spurious pleasures. Some even, the disciples of those whom your correspondent has stigmatized as the open, undisguised and sneering advocates of cruelty, become voluntarily, and in the disgusting mode of bravado, more disposed to encourage and extend those base practices, on pains being taken to decry and reform them. Of this class was the late * * * * * * * * * * *, whose name I should not at all scruple to mention, but from respect to the charitable and humane disposition, generally, of his surviving family. He was the foremost, although the heedlessness of unthinking youth was past, in all the petty, I had almost said petty larceny cruelties of the chace; such as baiting of badgers, and even poor inoffensive asses, to death with his hounds, hunting ducks, tying owls to their backs, and tearing poor domestic and useful cats, living in the confidence of, and grateful for the protection of man, limb from limb, with his savage terriers—exclusive of the more high-bred enormities of dislocating the joints of deer, and riding horses to death! Mark how well this unfeeling wretch could nevertheless feel for himself; for all of this stamp have not the impartial hardihood of that famous, and so belauded bull-baiting politician, who had no more feeling for himself, than he had for animal and human nature at large. The former, in a strong leap upon an aged horse, long the victim of his abuse, caught a fall, in which his right leg received a compound fracture, or rather was nearly mashed to pieces, by the pressure of the whole weight of the horse. The poor lamed animal was immediately sold, to be whipped to death in the mail coaches, after a long life of labour of the severest kind. The mighty hunter himself, I was assured by the surgeon who attended him, confined many months to a bed of torment, night and day, gave vent to his agonies, in pitiful and cowardly cries and lamentations, which would have disgraced a girl of sixteen. He who had occasioned and delighted in spectacles of so much animal misery, now laid upon a sleepless bed, bewailing his hard fortune, in being subjected to such cruel sufferings! A late trial, of a most infamous complexion in all the articles of complaint, has developed another scene of country barbarity, the setting of dog spears, which, exclusive of the cruelty and unfairness of their original object, are things of a most dangerous nature to uninformed passengers, to women and children. I wonder the country is not alarmed at such infamous proceedings, and that they are not instantly presented to a grand jury. If they be illegal, and a great law authority has hinted as much, the perpetration of such feudal infamy in a free country and an enlightened age, ought to be stigmatized and held up to universal contempt, as well as punished with the utmost severity of the law. Could it be possible that a law should exist, authorising such proceedings, it ought to be torn from our statute-book with all the energy of popular disdain.

Certainly, as your correspondent observes, much of the barbarity of former times is by-gone, and it is devoutly to be wished it may never return;

return; but the slowness of reform is, with regret, to be attributed to the fewness in number of those who are bold enough to become its strenuous and practical advocates, and to the selfish apathy of that numerous body, who indeed will not commit cruelties themselves, but will, nevertheless, witness the commission of it in others, with the most quiet and indulgent indifference. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

HUMANITAS ALTER.

MR. POWIS'S PAMPHLET ON SHOEING.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

GIVE me leave to say a few words on the side of your late review of Mr. Powis's Pamphlet, in reply to a writer under the signature of Crito. I think your reviewer did full justice in that instance to the well-established impartiality of the Sporting Magazine. He gave Mr. Powis credit for having published a spirited performance, but certainly could not, with any degree of truth, award to him the honours of an original one, with regard to the subject on which he treated. It becomes all writers to take a wary retrospect as to what has been previously discovered and practised by others; had such been the prudent conduct of our late veterinary writers and professors, they would have avoided that depressing load of lawful ridicule, by which their temporary reputation has been overwhelmed. Your correspondent does not even appear to be informed, or to enter into the spirit of the 'cock of the hat men.' Some years ago, our great discoverers in the horse-shoe line, obtained for a while that significant title, from the circumstance of a facetious writer comparing their wonderful and perpetual changes in the form of the shoe, to the similar exertions of the hat-maker, in the fashionable changes in the cock of the hat; observing, that the original inventor of the hat itself, was to those wonderful improvers, a mere man of straw.

Crito does not prove much acquaintance with the work of Osmer, by styling it an elaborate publication. On the contrary, it is far more concise and easy to be understood by our operative farriers, than any of our late veterinary publications on shoeing. What point is there in the phrase, 'gratuitously told,' when applied to the information that Osmer occupied the premises lately relinquished by Moorcroft, when, at this distance of time, it is known to so few, among which few, I dare say, Crito did not make a unit?

Neither the reviewer nor myself condemn Mr. Powis for a republication of those plain rules on shoeing, to which Crito alludes; but had Crito been circumspect enough to have taken the precaution we just now recommended, it might have spared him a wonder. To go no farther, about twenty years ago, such a number of the Shoeing Smith's Guide, a cheap tract, in which the rules in question were adapted to the lowest capacities, were circulated, as I believe Mr. Powis would be very glad, could he boast, were circulated of his pamphlet.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

AN OLD SPORTSMAN.

SPORTING

SPORTING SUBJECTS, &c.

Among the Specimens of the Fine Arts, now exhibiting at the British Institution, Pall-Mall.

WHEN the chilly hand of winter has closed the garden scenes, and spread the ermine mantle of snow over the whole of the landscape, the florist, still eager to inspect and admire the elegant and variegated productions of nature, seeks for an agreeable and interesting place of amusement in the hot-houses, where, by an artificial heat, the industry of the gardener seems to have chained the perpetuum ver; the everlasting spring of Eden and of the Golden Age. Thus, when the rigour of the season confines us within the boundaries of the metropolis, and veils from us the lovely face of Nature, the British Institution opens its well-furnished rooms, and by the exhibition of pleasing copies and imitations of those objects, the real sight of which we cannot obtain, compensates our transient loss, and atones for our temporary disappointment. This is one of the numerous advantages which distinguish this liberal establishment; the emulation which it kindles and fosters in its generous bosom, and the opportunity it offers to the artists of obtaining some reward for their studies, by the sale of their works, are too well known to require our pointing them out to the gratitude of the painters and the discernment of the public. Desiring to contribute as much as it lies in our power to the general encouragement, and to direct the eyes of our subscribers towards the pieces which are directly or indirectly connected with the sporting world, we will endeavour to express, in a few words, our opinions upon several performances which naturally rank under that denomination.

No. 51. Death of the Goldfinch. By JAMES WARD, R. A.—Although the two animals pourtrayed in this small, yet excellent picture, are not, and ought not to be the object of our sport; yet the truth with which they are both painted, the fierceness of the young grimalkin, the expiring gasps of the innocent songster, are so well expressed, and shew so conspicuously the usual freedom of hand which peculiarly characterises the style of this much-esteemed academician, that it claims our particular attention. The furry coat of the tortoise-shell cat, the variegated plumage of the goldfinch, are nature itself; and were we not sorry to find so much roughness, by lumps of colours bristling on the canvas, we would bestow an unrestrained encomium upon the whole. As one of the first animal painters of our days, Mr. Ward is a favourite with sportsmen, and deserves his extensive fame among them.

No. 69. Moor-Shooting. By PH. REINAGLE, R. A.—This academician is so well known for his ability in painting subjects of this nature, that we have only to state, that this performance possesses all the usual delicacy of his pencil, and the glowing beauty of his pallet.

No. 172. The Chace, by THE SAME, and a companion to the preceding performance, is its equal in merit. The odora canum vis, the ardour and eagerness which animate the whole pack of hounds, the horses bent on the chace, the hunters prone on their horses, all express the bustle of the sport. The landscape in both perform- ances ances is painted with truth and an appropriate tranquillity, which gives a still greater relief and animation to the pursuit.

No. 216. Martin-Cats. By J. CONSTABLE.—We have no doubt but this hasty sketch was done after nature, and in the fleeting and unsteady presence of the wild creatures it exhibits. We must confess that we expected a little more of that elegant touch which we are sure the artist, when at home, might have bestowed upon several parts of the picture, without detracting in the least from the likeness of the animals, but we were disappointed. A sketch, in its roughest state, will evince a spirited mind, but ought never to shew sloveuliness.

No. 111. Don Quixote and Sancho journeying to the Inn after their encounter with the Yonguezion Carriers. By ABR. COOPER.—It has been often said that some men were born poets; Nascuntur poetæ; and indeed the same has been asserted of painters.—The famous Corregio, who has justly obtained the admiration of a posterity of more than two centuries, and whose fame will last as long as the world continues in existence, had no idea of becoming a painter when he was grinding the colours of his master Bianchi; and the very ingenious artist, whose performance is under our consideration at this moment, had not, a very few years ago, we are told, the least idea of ever climbing the laurel walks of the chromatic Parnassus. Yet the rapid progress he has made in the art is astonishing. We had formed an idea of his style, but he has gone farther, and really gives us hopes to see him, one day, among the best animal painters this country ever produced. His composition in the dismal scene this picture represents, is full of spirit and fidelity to the text of Cervantes, and we have heard several visitors declare that, a tout prendre (all in all), it is one of the best performances in the Exhibition. Rosinante, with his head down, dragging along his chivalrous carcase, seems to bewail his master's mishap, and exhibits his anatomical character with truth and effect; whilst the discomfited Knight, thrown across the back of the Borrico, contrasts ludicrously well with the arch look of the rogue who leads the van. Mr. Cooper has been very happy in this picture —his pallet is sober and clean, his pencil animated, yet steady, and his characters well expressed and classically good. The most pleasing of eulogies was bestowed upon this picture: soon after its appearance in the rooms—it was SOLD.

No. 150. Angling. By W. F. WITHERINGTON. — The patient and tranquil diversion of angling has always charms for a pensive mind, and indeed those charms are so powerfully enticing, that the most lively, the most spirited boys, will often leave aside the bustle of other games, the cricket-bat, the hoop, the swinging or skipping-rope, for the fishing-rod and line, and stand as motionless as statues, on the verdant bank, in hope to catch the smallest gudgeon, or most insignificant inmate of the rippling brook. The performance before our eyes is of a pleasing effect, and exhibits that clean and agreeable style we generally find in the works of this artist.

No. 134. Crossing the Bridge. —141. Crossing the Brook.—84. Early Morning.—90. The Return in the Evening.—By JAMES BURNETT.

NETT.—It is impossible to deny, that since the days of Berchem and P. Potter, few, very few painters of rustic scenes, of cottages and meadows, ever breathed life into the nostrils of their cattle. This young artist animates every thing he touches—his cows seem to think—his goats ruminate in deep thoughts—his sheep are in profound meditation—his fowls are alive—their attitude, shape, colour—all is true to nature; and, if this promising painter does not allow Encouragement and Praise to breed as they too often do, Carelesness, and her sister, Slovenliness upon his pallet, he bids fair to become a Rosa di Tivoli on the banks of the Thames, and to evince the talents of this great painter, without his eccentricities.

No. 15. The disposal of a favourite Lamb. By W. COLLINS.—All the characters in this well-conceived performance, are busily intent upon the subject, and are all at their post—the regret, the unwillingness to part from so innocent, so pleasing a creature, and the reluctance at delivering it into the hands of the slaughter-breathing lad in the blue coat, all is well expressed, and does credit to the artist. The scene around is painted with liveliness and truth.

No. 45. Battle of Salamanca. By T. A. ATKINSON.—

"Dant alios Furiæ torvo spectacula Marti!"
HOR. carm. I. od. 28.

Battles are the sports of the God of war; but it is not on that account that we draw the attention of the sportsman upon the present battle-piece. We have in view to commend the artist in this place most particularly, for his able skill in painting that warlike creature, who boldly shares with man the dangers, the fatigues, but not the laurels, of the field. Mr. Atkinson is too well known to want our praise in order to fix the degree of his fame. We therefore will content ourselves with saying, that this picture is by no means inferior to any one painted by the same artist.

No. 74. Infancy: a Child watching the progress of a Snail. By ISAAC POCOCK.—This is sport also, but an innocent one—In this beautiful infant, with eyes intent upon the slow and half-blind reptile, and watching its crawling and tardy motions, we find a most interesting allegory of the slow growth of man, of his tardiness in acquiring knowledge, of his natural wish of ascending, and climbing up the steep road to wealth and honours, and of his shortsightedness in the most common dealings of life. The performance is very pleasing, on account of the loveliness of the colouring, which exhibits a freshness most appropriate to the subject.

No. 73. The favourite Bird. By W. THOMAS.—This is a sweet subject, and executed with a great deal of taste and delicacy.

No. 78. A Boy feeding Guinea-pigs. By C. BIEDERMANN.—We do not see much in this picture; it appears to have been the occupation of a few leisure hours.—Mr. C. Biedermann's Mendicants (No. 53), evince much more of his real ability, than the present specimen of his art.

No. 79. Chess. By GEORGE JONES.—In this picture we admire the fertility and versatility of this very clever artist's genius—he can, with equal success, pourtray the elegantly furnished inside of a fashionable apartment, and the rough, rugged cottages of Devonvonshire; the flashy lass of the west end of the town, and the plain dress of the peasant girl. He is equally pleasing every where.

No. 92. A Terrier's Head. By N. Chantry.—The character and peculiar vivacity of the whole breed, is well expressed in this study; and The Partridges, at No. 114, prove that this artist has some claim to the future reputation of a very excellent painter of animals and still life. These two pictures being ex professo studies, we cannot say much upon them.

No. 96. The Peasant's Dog. By Abraham Cooper. — This small picture justifies, in part, all we have said above, in our criticism upon the Don Quixote of the same artist.

No. 104. A View on Epping Forest. By P. Nasmyth.—A spot so well known to sportsmen, and painted by an artist, who every year gives new proofs of his rapid success and advance in the delightful path of the chromatic art which he has selected, ought to be mentioned in the Sporting Magazine. The visitor at the rooms looking at this well-coloured landscape, will most likely say, "There I was, and was happy—there my faithful dog was strayed, there I found him again"—and other reflexions will order the canvas to disappear, and the scene to be brought, as if in reality, before the eyes of the spectator.

No. 145. Girl and Rabbit. By G. Watson.—After a few glances at this picture, which is well executed, let the eyes turn to No. 137, Sacred Music, and the visitor will say that the artist was merely sporting here, as he could execute there so good a performance.

No. 183. Bird-Catching. By J. Linnell.—The cruelty of depriving the mother bird of her young, has been reproved in all ages, but to no purpose—is then man in his infancy a compound of cruelty and playfulness, two peculiar varieties of character, which, in a more advanced age, may be veiled and disguised, but never entirely eradicated—silenced by religion and reason, but often breaking into existence again? This is a melancholy reflection, which should not make its appearance at the sight of so lovely a picture.—Mr. Linnell has adopted a peculiar manner of colouring, which, if it were not sometimes outrè, would always be sure to please.

No. 208. Dead Game. By Edw. Bell.—No. 223. Dead Game. By E. A. Spilsbury.—No. 21. Partridges. By W. F. Witherington.—Of all the departments of the art, dead subjects and still life are the most easy. If ever the artist is possessed of any knack at imitation, he has only to paint what he sees, and is sure to succeed. In this line, high finishing and clearness of colouring, are the most essential points.

No. 196. The Juvenile Sportsman. By William Smith.—This specimen of the artist's talents will please many, and make them conceive hopeful ideas of the painter's future improvements.

No. 225. Vulture. By E. A. Spilsbury.—The ferocious eye, fierce countenance, and innate cruelty, of this secondary tyrant of the air, next to the eagle, but less elevated in his habits, are well represented here, and shew the bird in all the solemn majesty of his rapacious character.

AN

AN OLD MAN'S EXTENUATION FOR MARRYING A YOUNG WIFE.

MR. EDITOR,

SHOULD you think the following arguments of an old man for his having married a young woman, are likely to be agreeable, amusing, or edifying to your spirited readers, the gay and jovial sons of pleasure and rural sports, you are at liberty to insert them in your next Sporting Museum.

I am an old man, that is I am on the wrong side of sixty-five, therefore I cannot be said to be young; yet I am still a hardy, tough, and hearty old fellow, as you can meet with in any county in the kingdom. Having experienced the loss of an old friend, an affectionate wife, after forty years mutual agreement and conjugal happiness, I found myself a lone man, much at a loss, quite solitary and uncomfortable, both at home and abroad, by day and by night. There was something wanting at fire-side and a-bed, and indeed on every part of my premises. That necessary object I well knew, was a wife, and I therefore directed my whole care and attention to supply the deficiency, and fixed my choice upon a lively, blooming, healthy, decent, and pretty girl of twenty, as wholesome and pretty a piece of flesh and blood, as a man of taste and judgment could desire. But before I was able to give the finishing stroke to this important business, my friends and neighbours got scent of it, and I was harassed out of all patience, almost to distraction, by their wise and wholesome admonitions and advice, which they termed prudent argumentation, and wise logic. It is a hard case that an old man, who has seen and knows the world, cannot please his fancy and consult his own taste and judgment in a matter of such importance, without the officious interference of his wise friends.

Mrs. Sagely paid me a short visit. Looking at the window, then casting her eyes around the room, she observed, "How comfortably are you situated, Mr. Oldboy; your prospect is enchantingly beautiful, and your rooms so genteely, so elegantly fitted up and furnished, you ought to have, and I believe in my heart you must have, a wife shortly, but I trust it will be a suitable one; you must not take a girl, my dear Sir, but a staid woman of prudence and accomplishments; an agreeable, suitable companion, one that will do credit to your situation and years."

"You mean, madam, I do suppose," said I, "that I must take an old woman, but my intention is to take a young one, one who will make it spring all the year; you have both heard and seen, that when the good King of Judah was grown old, and his friends and subjects were desirous of making his days long and happy, they did not clap a death's head under his arm, nor tuck him up with an old woman, but sought out for their loved king one of the fairest and most healthy young damsels in their kingdom, one whose countenance was like the blossoms in May, and whose approach was like the invigorating rays of the God of Day. Such a proceeding was acting wisely, for an old woman must freeze an old man to death."

"My late good friend," she returned, "was not a young woman, yet yet you took no harm, nor did I ever suspect you to be weary of her."

"I was not," I replied; "I love an old coat as long as it lasts, but when one must have a new one, who would make choice of an old one? A new garment should consist of new materials and workmanship."

"I believe in my conscience," said she, "that were I at liberty, you would refuse me."

"You undervalue yourself, madam, and wrong me," answered I, "it would be impossible, there is something so agreeable in your conversation, and you carry your years so well." The conclusion of this speech put a period to Mrs. Sagely's visit. She was only able to say, "That I might live to repent should I put in execution what she suspected me to be unthinkingly, madly, about," and she hurried away.

My old neighbour Careful, put on a wise face and sagacious look, and said to me, amongst his wise counsels, "Mr. Oldboy, you are wrong, entirely in the wrong, you are sixty-six or seven, and you ought to recollect what the old philosopher said to one who asked him when a man was to marry; his reply was, "A young man not yet, an old man not at all. A wife, I grant," continued he, "is a comfortable and necessary appendage to a house, and if you want a wife, and you ought to be the best judge of that matter, yet you must give me leave to remark, that you ought to consider your age, and take a woman suitable to your years and circumstances," &c. &c.

"Your meaning is," said I, "that I should marry a woman of sixty years old, with four or five thousand pounds in property."

"That is my advice," returned he.

"And give me leave to say," said I, "very unsuitable advice it is for me, who am an old man, but it is very suitable to a young man of small fortune and genteel connections. Pray transfer your advice to young Lusty, his stomach is good, his digestion strong, he has need of money, and for the sake of four or five thousand, might very well away with an old woman, it would be prudence in him; but my appetite is not so keen, nor my digestion so strong as they were forty years ago: old heifer beef and tough ewe mutton will not go down with me now: no; old harridans will not do at my time of life, but I must have a young and tender lamb to lie in my bosom."

I shall trouble you, Mr. Editor, with but one more of my sage, my unwelcome advisers.

My old friend Forecast, is about my own age, he is a sage logician, a man famous for the profoundness of his arguments, who has a multitude of such whys and wherefores, as he thinks are sound, undeniable, and such as he believes no man living dare to call in question, or presume to confute.

My friend Forecast, after having started the subject matter in question, and given me a long list of dissuasives, fell into his grand argument, and thus began:

"You, my long and much esteemed friend and neighbour, will do wisely in maturely reflecting upon the nature and indissolubility of the marriage union, and consider with yourself, that when once this knot is tied, then nothing less than death will be able to loose and untie it. Should the chain sit ever so uneasily upon you, should it it gall you in some tender part, by either unkind treatment, bad habits, improper and unseemly department, or by a perverse temper, which not unfrequently render the silken cords of matrimony rough iron bonds, yet there remains no prospect, no hope of a release on your part; save only in your own final dismiss on earth, which is a melancholy reflection to most men. You, friend Oldboy, are not ignorant of the old and just saying, viz. the young may die, but the old must; there is, therefore, no hope for you to expect to say with the poet Dryden,

> Here lies my wife, here let her lie,
> Now she's at rest, and so am I.

Consider maturely, therefore, of what you are about, I intreat you, since it is so momentous a concern, and do not have to repent in much sorrow of heart and self-accusation, when it will be too late.

"Bless my heart," answered I, "what a solemn face you put upon this matter. But give me leave, friend Forecast, to observe, that your argument, important and cogent as you may think it, does not require a moment's serious consideration. It is so far from dissuading me from my purposed intention, that it confirms the prudence and propriety of it, for according to your own preconceived fears, the assurance lies mostly on my side. It is universally known that the tender, the delicate, the enchantingly charming and lovely part of the human species, are from their cradle exposed and liable to more diseases and maladies of one kind and another, than I can enumerate; and were such diseases styled Death's hounds, with which he hunts the dear angels to their last homes, he might in truth be said to have a more numerous pack than any noble sportsman in this or any other kingdom. And where we hear read of the death of one woman between sixty and seventy, we hear and read of the deaths of many hundreds of females who have fallen a prey to the insatiable leveller's numerous and keen scented pack from the age of eighteen to fifty-five. When a woman has attained to her sixtieth year, she has then gained the harbour, and rides at anchor, not in perfect safety and security, it is true, but she is then exposed and liable to only the common indispositions of frail mortality, which she knows well how to encounter and put to flight, for a woman at that age, is another lady Bountiful, and is not only able to preserve her own health, but to cure as many others in her neighbourhood in ten years as the doctors kill in twenty.—It is well known to all intelligent huntsmen, that a hare which has been many times hunted, is hard to chase down, for such are old and cunning, they cannot run either faster or longer than in their younger years, we are certain, but they are so well acquainted with the country, have recourse to such various shifts, they dodge, squat, and manœuvre so craftily, that a clever huntsman, when he supposes such a hare to have been started, will call off the dogs, and put them to searching for other game, being well assured that there is but small hope of taking ancient puss, whom age and various trials have made weary and knowing.

Now the grand leveller of distinctions seems to act upon a plan exactly similar with respect to the lovely part of human creation. For when a woman has evaded and escaped his stanch and numerous pack till she has arrived to her sixtieth tieth year, death then loses all hope of subduing her by his stanch pack, therefore he calls off his pursuers to attack the young and middle aged, whom he can more easily subdue, leaving the ancient ladies to old Father Time, who conquers all things, and consequently will subdue all old women; some he conquers between eighty and ninety, others between ninety and an hundred, whilst some few are so hardy in their constitutions, so regular in all their habits and customs, never guilty of any excess either in eating or drinking, sleep or watching, motion or rest, that Time cannot conqner them till they have arrived at an hundred and a few old years, beyond which period none can go, as old Father Time is sure to wear out the strongest and most temperate by that date, when they fall the victims of Time, and not of disease.

You now see, friend Forecast, the inconclusiveness of your sage arguments; young women, dear creatures, are never sure of another day, they can scarcely say, that it is probable they shall behold another revolution of the four seasons, they are so surrounded with weaknesses, so exposed to various maladies. But with respect to those females who have weathered those various weaknesses and maladies incident to females under fifty-five, and who have arrived at their sixtieth year, it is something more than probable that such will then live to see twenty-five, thirty-five, forty, or forty odd years more, and at last give up the ghost without a complaint of any kind, save only the complaint of Father Time.

"And now, friend Forecast," continued I, addressing him very expressively, "to shew you the liberality of my sentiments, and to convince you that I am not rigid nor bigoted to my own opinions, I will freely allow you to marry a woman of your own age, viz. sixty-six, or if you are desirous of convincing the world of your having a superior degree of prudence, I will allow you to take one five or ten years older than yourself, and when you have done so, I will bet you an hundred to five that she follows you to your last asylum, Niobe like, dissolved in tears. You will allow me likewise to observe, that it will be probable, should any tolerably sober man of forty, after that, make her an offer of his hand and heart, that she will, with a modest and prudent reluctance, accept both, and will pass your grave with a sigh, and again approach the altar of Hymen."

In this manner I parried my prudent friend's advice, and freed myself of their officious advice and fertile arguments and ratiocination. My friend Forecast, was as greatly disgusted at my daring to dispute his wise reasons, as Mrs. Sagely had been at my telling her that she carried her years so well. I was left to follow my own inclinations, so I have made the dear object of my affections my own, and am gratefully pleased that she has made me the master of her charms, her youth, and beauty; nor will I either fear or doubt of her being grateful for my having made her the mistress of my heart, and of a situation, which Mistress Sagely affirmed to be pleasant, genteel, and elegant, and that she will warm and invigorate, comfort and delight the heart and soul of, Mr. Editor, your most obedient humble servant, and constant reader,

THOMAS OLDBOY.

THE

THE SAGACIOUS HARE.

E SAGACIOUS HARE.

An Etching.

THE instinctive faculties of the hare, direct her timidity to such various modes of concealing herself, and of evading the pursuit of her numerous and deadly enemies, that as their purpose cannot be always completely understood, she sometimes appears to be a most simple, and at others a very sagacious animal. The undermentioned instance of what is usually termed cunning, seems worth notice, and is the narrative of a fact.

An old hare, which lay for some years on Scotton Moor, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, was well known among the neighbouring sportsmen, had been many times hunted and coursed, and was as constantly lost near the edge of an old disused stone quarry; every usual means to find or recover her had been used in vain, till one unfortunate day, while her pursuers were beating the bottom of the pit, which was partly overgrown with stunted vegetation, she was accidentally seen squatted on a beam which had been inserted into the rock, a considerable way down, for the purpose of forming a crane to raise the blocks of stone.

LEGAL JEU D'ESPRIT.

In the King's Bench, Michaelmas Term, in the 41st year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King George the Third.—Between John Cussans, plaintiff, and John Emery, defendant.

MIDDLESEX to Wit.—John Cussans, complains of John Emery being in the custody of the Marshal of the Marshalsea of our Sovereign Lord the King, before the King himself, in a plea of trespass on the case; for that whereas the said John Emery, on the first day of November, in the year of our Lord, that now is at Westminster, in the county of Middlesex aforesaid, did voluntarily, and of his own free will and accord, and by his right faith and good troth declare and make known to the said John Cussans, a certain promise of a contingent advantage and benefit to him the said John Cussans (that is to say), that whensoever after the said first day of November, the tragedian George Cooke belonging to the Theatre Royal, in the parish of Saint Paul, Covent Garden, and in the city and county aforesaid, should act a part of a play at the aforesaid Theatre, he, the said John Emery, would to the said John Cussans send, transmit, forward, or by some means cause to be delivered, a paper, writing, or order, (or by what other name soever the same may be more correctly denominated), whereby or by means whereof, he, the said John Cussans, and also an associate of him, the said John Cussans, might gain and obtain free ingress and undisturbed admission into some convenient part of the said theatre, in order to be present at, and receive the full entertainment and instruction derivable or emanating from such play, so to be acted at Covent Garden Theatre aforesaid. And whereas, since the day herein before set forth (that is to say) the first day of November, in the year of our Lord aforesaid, the said tragedian George Cooke, hath not only acted a part of a play at the Theatre Royal aforesaid, but hath moreover acted different and distinct parts in different and distinct plays, and these further-furthermore or some or one of them he hath acted repeatedly; yet the said John Emery, not at all regarding his aforesaid promise, which he undertook on the said first day of November, at Westminster aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, faithfully to perform, but contriving and fraudently intending to deceive and defraud the said John Cussans in this respect, hath in no wise heeded the pain of mind and anxiety of mental sensations to which the disappointment consequent upon and incidental to the aforesaid conduct and neglect of the said John Emery, hath subjected him the said John Cussans. And the said John Cussans avers, that the damage and injury to which such conduct and neglect on the part of the said John Emery hath subjected and exposed him, hath indeed been extensive and considerable, insomuch that his health and constitution have become impaired to a most alarming and dreadful degree by reason of the disappointment before mentioned. And the said John Cussans further avers, that for the purpose of restoring his health and constitution to the same state of strength and vigour as they were in at the period when the said John Emery made his aforesaid promise, (that is to say) on the first day of November, in the year aforesaid, he the said John Cussans hath expended divers and large sums of money in the purchase of sundry and manifold medicines, cordials, comforts, and refreshments (to wit), geneva, twopenny, ale, purl, gin-hot, and other salutary and fashionable strong waters and compounds, to the amount of many pounds of lawful money of Great Britain. But the said John Cussans being of a clement and merciful temper and inclination towards the said John Emery, and being averse and unwilling to enforce the whole of his demand in the premises, is content to require of the said John Emery in ample and entire bar and satisfaction of every future or further application, and in total discharge and acquittance of any recompence due by the said John Emery to the said John Cussans, one friendly, amicable, modest, and moderate libation on the evening of Sunday, which will be the twenty-first day of December, in the aforesaid year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred, at such place or chosen spot as may be settled upon, prefixed, and regulated, anterior to that evening, by the said John Emery, due notice thereof being in that case awarded to the said John Cussans; who in the alternative upon the ground and foundation herein before minutely described doth bring his suit.

FOLLY IN PRAISE OF ALL THE WORLD.

No. VIII.

——FOR there's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part. Be't lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, her's; deceiving, her's;
Lust and rank thoughts, her's; her's revenge; her's
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longings, slanders, mutability;

All

All faults that may be nam'd, nay that hell knows;
Why her's, in part, or all; but rather all.—

Folly to her Darling Daughters.

I told ye once that I ne'er reason,
That naught to me comes out of season;
So having told ye faith and troth,
How friendly those are of the cloth,
And how they prize their ears of asses,
Why not in turn revere my lasses?
Those darling creatures, without whom
Folly would see her day of doom.
'Tis they claim to me close alliance
And bid all rays of sense defiance;
Wherefore they best obey my rules,
From whom proceeds each race of fools.
Women, my sons, were born for pleasure,
And I'll be sworn—they yield full measure;
Wherefore, in justice, they must claim
From me the greatest share of fame.
Females alone have pow'r to bless
Your leisure, with voluptuousness.
Has not great Jove himself knock'd under,
And laid aside, for them, his thunder?
Did not my Alexander's bliss,
Depend on Courtezan Thais,
For whom he fir'd Persepolis?
The Roman page alike exposes,
One who in war gave bloody noses;
Great Antony, that fighting spark,
Who for my daughter prov'd a Marc.
Since at him Cleopatra set
Her cap, and caught him in Love's net,
When he for her Fame's flag straight furl'd,
For jilt resigning thus—the world.
For Bathsheba, who was it slid
To me from virtue? Great David;
While for my daughter's charms all reason
Was banish'd by son Solo-mon,
Who, as it hath of old been said,
Enjoy'd full many an hundred.
Have not Philosophers, Stoicians,
Popes, Cardinals, and Rhetoricians,
Left sense's cold insipid shrine,
To bend 'fore Altars feminine?
What prov'd the light dubb'd metaphysic,
With Abelard?* but taper's wick;
Which was extinguished with great ease,
By blazing pow'rs of Heloise,
Mine and Love's fam'd extinguisher,
Which in him wrought so great a stir,
That after he sang, better far
Than Signor, at an opera;†
Yet had the muse of Homer graven
Odes on his songs—like croaking raven;
He rather had remain'd from choice,
Than by the clipping—gain'd a voice;
Since he was not ordain'd by fate,
Himself like Atys,‡ to castrate,
But rather until Death had staid,
The friend of widow, wife, and maid.
Did not of old that sage inditer,
Sir Sophocles, great tragic writer,
Affirm that life was but an hum,
If fetter'd by that Minx—Wis-dom?
Silence, 'tis said, bespeaks the wise;
Wherefore Minerva most did prize
The Owl, that 'fore Sol blinks his peeper,
Proving itself by day a sleeper,
Loving to make his instinct's noon,
When blanket night displays Mam Moon.
Begone such drones—my girls ne'er
mope,
But give their thoughts at all times
scope;
Words are enough for me, so they Incessantly my themes convey;
And, apropos—I now think meet
To give grave heads a precious treat,
That long have noddles rack'd in vain,
To find what they with ease might gain;
Since from the root of woman's tongue,
Perpetual motion might be wrung;

* Peter Abelard, a native of Britany, was born in the eleventh century, and became conspicuous for his powers as a deep logician and metaphysician; he was, however, still more celebrated for his lessons on Love, into whose intricacies he initiated his lovely pupil Heloise, who found much more to fascinate her mind in materiality, than all the speculative chimeras engendered from logic and the doctrine of abstruse metaphysics.

† It would be useless in this place to animadvert upon the ferocious conduct of the relentless and cruel Canon Fulbert towards the lover of his niece, the story having been already so frequently recited in poetry as well as prose.

‡ Atys was a shepherd of Phrygia, of whom Cybele became enamoured, he having been entrusted with the care of her temple, upon condition of never violating the duties of celibacy; having, however, forgotten this restriction, and yielded to the impulse of passion, he became delirious, and in that state emasculated himself, as we are informed, with a sharp stone.

 Then

Then seize the moment, pray dissect 'em,
They're just in prime, so don't neglect 'em.
Now after this were it not treason,
To couple them with growling Reason;
Who this hour think of naught but fashion,
The next are scorch'd with fervent passion.
Having thro' eye-glass, keen survey'd,
Some Bond-street beau by me array'd,
In all that can my pow'r sustain,
('Tis understood—he's void of brain)
Since that is not my merchandize,
For I take heads by weight and size;
Thus sculls when huge and wond'rous dense,
Delight me most, as foes to sense;
And if the noddle e'en were stone,
I'd prize it more that noddle bone.
Is it not fact that with the ladies,
Dear vanity the darling trade is?
Do they not lay the greatest stress,
On what 'pertains to show and dress?*
Ne'er yielding to sedate Reflection,
Twin sister of sour-fac'd dejection;
That drives the giggle from plump face,
Enthroning sadness in its place.
Here midway break we off the strain,
A future song could more explain,
And laud my daughters to the sky,
Whose merits none can praise too high;
Ranking with me so passing jolly,
They blaze true types of ev'ry folly;
Wherefore now free from all restriction,
I grant aloud my benediction.

DOG SPEARS.

IN the Independent Whig, Sunday Newspaper of the 20th instant, appeared the following account of a law case tried at the late Oxford Assizes; which we copy without comment, for the amusement and information of our readers:—

Dean v. Sir William Clayton, Bart.

This was an action tried at the last Assizes at Oxford, to recover the value of a dog, killed by means of a dog-spear, in a wood called the Moor Wood, the property of Sir William Clayton, Bart. This wood, which is near six miles in circumference, and is situated on the confines of Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire, has for upwards of seven years past been converted into an enormous game preserve by the owner, whose estate it joins for about one mile and a half only, afterwards abutting, for a space exceeding four miles more, on the lands of different proprietors, in both the counties before mentioned, to the great loss and injury of the farmers of those lands. The destruction committed by the immense number of wild animals to which so large a wood afforded protection, became so serious a grievance, that one farmer, Mr. Benjamin Stallwood, of Becking, actually renounced his farm; and his landlord, Mr. Johnson, together with Mr. Copestake Townsend, the landlord of another farm adjoining, called Finnimore, published an invitation in the newspapers to all qualified persons to sport upon their estates. This, however, did not afford an adequate remedy for the evil; because the different keepers belonging to this vast preserve, made it their constant practice every morning, before sun-rise (Sundays only excepted), to drive all the game from the adjoining grounds into the preserve, and then to fix their dog-spikes in all the tracts by which the game entered the wood; so that if any

* This fact cannot be better elucidated than by quoting the famous Elizabeth of England, who, though possessing the most surprising mental qualifications, was, nevertheless, so completely enslaved by Vanity, that she would vary her apparel several times in one day, added to which, no woman could possibly be a more finished coquet.

sports-

sportsmen arrived afterwards, little or no game was to be found on the grounds contiguous to this vast wood, although the produce of those grounds was constantly eaten up by them; and if, unfortunately, these sportsmen started a solitary animal, it was sure to take to this well-known asylum, and the dog by which it was pursued was as certain of being destroyed by the sharp spikes which guarded every inlet.

Mr. Dauncey, in stating the case to the Jury, lamented that the defendant had not adopted a more manly line of conduct. It would have better become him either to have justified the act he had done; or if not justifiable, to have admitted this error; but instead of this, pleaded not guilty to the charge, denying that he was the cause of the mischief; and he understood it was now intended to be maintained, that Sir William Clayton was totally ignorant of what was done in this wood, of which he was sole proprietor; that it had never been made a game preserve with his knowledge and consent, although, as such, it was a well-known nuisance to all the surrounding country, and had drawn him (Sir William) into many unpleasant altercations.—Several persons in the employment of the defendant as game-keepers, &c. would, he said, be brought forward; and though he was aware that they would turn out to be very reluctant witnesses, yet he hoped he should be able to screw the truth out of them.

The first person examined was the Rev. Mr. Turner, of Great Marlow, to prove the killing of the dog. He deposed that he went with the plaintiff, Mr. Dean, to shoot, on Finnimore Farm, by leave of Mr. Townsend: that in Finnimore Wood they started a hare, which took directly into the Moor Wood; and that the only boundary between the two woods was a shallow ditch. Mr. Dean's dog pursued the hare, and was soon caught upon a dog's spear, which entered his breast; on being drawn off the spear, he instantly died. A plan of the wood was exhibited to the Court, by which it appeared to be intersected with roads in different directions: also the fatal spear itself was produced; the sight of which made a sensible impression on both the Judge and the Jury. It was confessed to be a very formidable instrument of destruction either to man or beast, and it was proved that several of these spears were placed close to the foot-paths frequented by men, women, and children likewise.

Stevens, the blacksmith, who made the spears, was then examined; he positively swore that he did not know what use they were made for; that he did not think Sir William Clayton knew any thing about them; that Joseph Webb, a farmer under Sir W. Clayton, and also one of his game-keepers, paid him for making them. It appeared, however, that this man was but a journeyman blacksmith; that he manufactured Sir William's iron, at so much a day, and that he had carried a large quantity of these spears made out of strike iron, to House, the game-keeper, who lives in the Moor Wood.

House* being sworn, declared that he was not hired to look after the

* This is the man who swore that George Carr shot at a pheasant, though the game, but to take care of the wood; that he knew nothing about dog-spears; that sometimes he had seen such an instrument as was shown to him in Court, sticking in a tree, but could not tell what it was for, or who placed it there. Being examined as to the place where the dead dog was found, he said he did not know how it was killed, nor the distance from the boundary, whether it was fifty yards, one hundred, or one hundred and fifty yards, but afterwards contradicting himself, he said, it was sixty-five yards, for he had measured it.

Woodrow,* another gamekeeper, was sworn: he likewise did not know what was meant by a dog-spike, and was sure his master, Sir William Clayton, had never ordered any such things to be set in the wood. Being shewn one, and asked if he had never seen such a thing before, answered, yes, he thought he had.—Where? in the wood.—What did he think it was put there for? to destroy foxes.

"Admirable!" exclaimed Mr. Dauncey to the Jury. "Gentlemen, you have heard as well as me, that foreign foxes are imported into this country at a very great expence, and so I suppose after they are let loose in our woods, these things are set to destroy them, and get quit of them again."

The prevarication of these three last witnesses excited the indignation of the Bench. It appeared clearly that Sir W. C. knew of the dog-spears being set in his woods; and Mr. Townsend proved that four dogs, belonging to different gentlemen upon visits at his house, had within these few years been killed by them. The defendant called no witnesses.

Mr. Justice Dallas reprehended severely, in his charge to the Jury, a practice so imminently dangerous and unfeeling, particularly as it appeared that women and children frequently passed that way. He said he had little doubt as to the illegality of the act in his own mind; but, as it was a new case, as well as a very important one, and as he was a very young Judge, he did not wish to lay down the law upon it without the concurrence of the other Judges, subject to whose decision a verdict was given to the plaintiff for 15l. the supposed value of the dog.

We can assure our readers, that we have received the report of the above trial from very respectable authority; and we publish it with great satisfaction, because we are in hopes that it will afford a remedy for an abuse, not easily exceeded either in magnitude or in atrocity. The destruction committed by game upon bread and other corn is incessant; it continues from the time the green blade rises from the earth, till the corn is carried to the barn. Every benevolent mind will deplore, that so large a proportion of food, capable of being applied to man's subsistthough it was impossible for him to see what Carr actually fired at. Carr, a respectable farmer's son, offered his oath that he never saw the pheasant till after his gun was fired, the bird having been raised by report of the gun. On this evidence Carr was sent to prison, as appears by a letter published in this paper about fourteen months ago, addressed to the Earl of Cardigan, John Hicks, Esq. and the Rev. Isaac King.

* This man was rated to the Income Tax for rabbit skins, of which he sold 130l. worth in one year, to a furrier at High Wycombe.

ence,

ence, should be abstracted from its proper destination. Our ancestors, it is true, preserved the game; but it was for the amusement of others as well as themselves; they had no idea of individual appropriation—no conception of preserves worth five and six hundred pounds a year. There is a thing called meanness, with which their pride would not permit them to be acquainted, and which has taught us moderns many ingenious arts and contrivances; among the rest that of keeping a great quantity of game at the cost of our neighbour, for our own gratification and advantage; permitting them to sally forth every night to forage, and then driving them in again every morning; setting up a profitable sanctuary for these petty plunderers, which carry off a farmer's crop with impunity, when a thief of his own species might be shot or hanged for it. After sunset no man, however qualified, dare kill game, nor before sun-rise in the morning; so that all night long the poor farmer must submit to be plundered by those petty larceners; and before the sun shows his face the diligent keeper is abroad; he drives all these nocturnal spoilers into safe sanctuary, and places around that sanctuary a fortification of dog-spikes, as sharp as razors, and as certain of accomplishing the work of canine destruction as is the spear of the Cossack on the body of a Frenchman. And, indeed, it ought to be noticed, that these spears have, in some instances, been fatal to the human as well as canine species: two cases have happened where persons wounded by these spears have, after lingering a long time, sunk into the grave in consequence of the injuries inflicted by them. It is reasonable to think, that what can kill a dog will dangerously wound a man. We can warrant the accuracy of the following fact:—Previous to the 1st day of October last, Mr. Jaques, of Marlow Mill, being a qualified person, was requested by Mr. Johnson, the owner of Becking Farm, to shoot him a few pheasants on that day, the first of the season. Mr. Jaques told the man servant who brought the message, that if he were to kill his master any pheasants, he must be on Becking grounds before day-light, to prevent House driving off the game. The servant was there by four o'clock; and found House already on the foot-path, which he did not dare to quit, having had notice of trespass from Mr. Johnson's tenant; but his dogs were put in different directions, driving in the game, which they are taught to do just as a shepherd's dog does a flock of sheep. At eight o'clock, Mr. Jaques arrived. "House," said Mr. Jaques, "have you left me any thing"—"No," said House, "you won't find a single bird." It was literally the fact; and Mr. Jaques passing again by the preserve, where House was stationed, said, "House, I always believed you to be one of the greatest story tellers in England, but I find you have spoke truth to day." Mr. Jaques then went to another part of Mr. Johnson's estate; but in the evening he returned home by Becking, at which time the game was pouring out of the wood to feed; he could have shot several pheasants, but as it was after sun-set he knew he would be informed against, and have 20l. to pay for each bird. Thus are the farmers plundered to satisfy the cupidity and sensuality of a few individuals, who, in this respect, at least, exceed the oppression formerly exercised by the feudal aristocrats of France.

LETTER

LETTER FROM AN OFFICER TO A BROTHER SOLDIER,

On the latter exchanging a Military Life for that of Keeper of an Hotel.

From our Head-quarters,
Nov. 4, 1813.

DEAR SIR,

NOT the least wonderful among the train of extraordinary things that have happened this year, is the concentration of your forces in the Temple of Bacchus, &c.; and as you have stationed your corpse in a fine commanding position, make no doubt but you are garrisoned for the winter, and will maintain it; particularly as you are well supplied with ammunition and stores; moreover, I understand that you have disbanded the troop of Pandars, lately lodged in the garrison, and have fitted their places with veteran soldiers; in truth, the others were little better than plundering rapscallions, lazy, idle, eating, drinking rascals, that studied nothing but their own ease; and as I am informed, obliged their late commandant to surrender at discretion. Moreover, I further understand, that you have added to the flying artillery, and have a very good train; this is good generalship, and meets with my warmest approbation, because as I belong to the light infantry, and sometimes am obliged to leave my baggage in one place and my ammunition at another, (light infantry manœuvre) I trust, as an old fellow soldier, you will give orders that if they should at any time find me harassed in any of my expeditions, to protect my flanks; and in case I should be obliged to make a sudden retreat, to take me under protection, and escort me to the garrison under an enfilade. I understand, to my great sorrow, that Capt. P, of , has been put under confinement by General Gout; I hope he will not be so much off his guard as to make friends with that arch destroyer Col. O. M. or as a medical friend, on our staff, calls it, the ODIUM Medicinalé, which lately killed Sir ———, by a quarrel with his aid-de-camp, Mr. Constitution. —With warmest and most sincere wishes for the general preservation of the garrison, and the health and prosperity of my worthy friend the commandant, his wife, and offspring, I have only to add, that under the judicious management of so hardy, so experienced, and so able a General as yourself, the garrison will always be maintained in good order; that the Brigade-Major will do his duty—the orderly Serjeant execute his—the clerk of the regiment will be correct in his books—and that should you want reinforcements, or ammunition, or stores, that our worthy Generalissimo, Providence, will never be in the rear, having fixed the port cullis in the gateway, against that rascally marauder Lieut.-Col. Want, who, by the by, is no more than a paltry Ensign, of a ruthless banditti. And lastly, that when that pale-faced Emperor Death sounds his potential trumpet for you to surrender, you may lie down in the field of battle covered with glory, only to awake to a brighter summer's more glorious campaign. From your poor sincere friend, F. F. B.

ANECDOTE.

THE late Bonnell Thornton, whose turn for wit and humour was only equalled by the strength of his understanding, used frequently quently to entertain himself and his friends at the expence of physicians, conceiving he had a right, as he was bred to the profession of physic. The formal wig was generally the object of his mirth. Mr. Thornton being once confined in his bed by a fever, and his friends thinking he might never recover, urged him incessantly to call in the assistance of the faculty. Wearied with their importunities, he at length promised to have a consultation on a certain day, when the friends attending, they found Mr. Thornton sitting up in his bed with the curtains open, looking gravely at three tye wigs placed in order upon blocks, between the bed posts. "What is the meaning of this," exclaimed the friends. "Why this is the consultation of physicians," answered Mr. Thornton; "I know what I am about—It is allowed to be more than an even chance against a patient, when he calls in a consultation of the perriwigs. The sight of the Doctor has cured many a patient," continued Thornton, "the danger lies in the Doctor's physic. Be at ease, my friends, Nature is the best physician; the assistance she wants I shall give, and save my money and my life." Thornton soon recovered, and for many years joined his friends in laughing at his consultation of physicians.

HINDOO CRUELTIES.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

IN a miscellaneous publication, destined as well to amuse as instruct; to relieve the mind from the fatigues of either the necessary business of the world, or the pressures of serious study, food for curiosity and admiration are indispensable. And the subjects, in order to please without cloying, must be detailed with variety, sometimes partaking of the mirthful and burlesque, at others of the horrible and apalling. They may each have its use, not only as ministering to curiosity, but as contributing to instruction. I am about, Sir, to cater for you, and to furnish your monthly feast with a dish, which none of your readers will deny to be sufficiently of the latter species—indeed, horrible enough!

The following tales of abomination were extracted from Dr. Buchanan's late publication on India. The facts were notorious and are incontrovertible. I shall make few comments upon them—a short appeal only, to reason and common sense. These are of the benefits of superstition, to a gulled and swindled world! Whether superstition of a newer and milder form, be the best possible antidote to expel the old, I leave to those, in whose hands, chance or order has placed the business; and I shall only venture to assert, that our Government in the East, paramount in all things, whenever it chooses so to be, has been eternally disgraced, by the permission for a moment of such enormities.

"About the year 1796, the following most atrocious and shocking murder, under the name of Suhumuruna, (literally with death), was perpetrated at Majilupoor, about a day's journey south from Calcutta. Vaucharamu, a brahman of the above place, dying, his wife went to be burned with the body. All the previous ceremonies were performed, she was fastened on the pile, pile, and the fire was kindled. The funeral pile was by the side of some brush wood, and near a river. It was at a late hour when the pile was lighted, and was a very dark and rainy night. When the fire begun to scorch this poor woman, she contrived to disentangle herself from the dead body, crept from under the pile, and hid herself among the brush-wood. In a little time, it was discovered, that only one body was on the pile. The relations immediately took the alarm, and began to hunt for the poor wretch who had made her escape. After they had found her, the son dragged her forth, and insisted upon her throwing herself upon the pile again, or that she should drown or hang herself. She pleaded for her life at the hands of her own son, and declared that she could not embrace so horrid a death. But she pleaded in vain; the son urged he should lose his cast, and that therefore he would die, or she should. Unable to persuade her to hang or drown herself, the son and the others then tied her hands and feet, and threw her on the funeral pile where she quickly perished."

I stop a moment to remark, that in a late work of a certain religious lady of great popularity as a methodistical writer, I observed great praise bestowed upon the casts or institutions for the separation of man, naturally equal, by casts or ranks; and upon the obligation in those barbarous countries, laid upon every man, to follow the trade or profession of his father. Such are the good lady's notions of the social order, and of human rights!

"Goopinat'hu, a brahman, employed in the Serampore printing office, in the year 1799, saw seventy-two females burned alive, with the remains of Ununta, a brahman of Bagnaporu, near Nudceyu. This Koolinu brahman had more than one hundred wives. At the first kindling of the fire, only three of these wives had arrived. The fire was kept kindling three days, when one or more arrived, the ceremonies were gone through, and they threw themselves upon the blazing fire. On the first day, three were burned; on the second and third day, nineteen more. Amongst those women, some were as much as forty years old, and others as young as sixteen. The three first had lived with this brahman, the others had seldom seen him. He married in one house four sisters, two of whom were among the number burned."—I am, &c. &c.

AN ABHORRER.

HUMOUROUS TRAITS OF SPORTING and FEASTING DIVINES.

From a Satirical and Sectarian Representation of the probable effects of the Non-residence Act, being an imitation of the sale of Curates, in a dialogue between an Auctioneer, Mr. Meanwell, Mr. Flesh and Blood, &c.

AUCTIONEER.—Well, but Mr. Meanwell, it is hoped you will find friends at your living, as well as at your curacy; where can be the harm of your removal, you cannot do good at two places at the same time?

Meanwell.—I am afraid it will be proved that there will be a great deal of harm in it; for, first, I am under the painful necessity of parting with my curate, who is a very worthy man, to give place to my young rector, and he is one of the wildest wildest creatures I ever met with. He came into the parish the other day to see about his residence, with a brace of greyhounds at his horse's heels, and one of them followed him into the church, and while he was reading prayers the dog reared upon his hind legs, (you know, Sir, greyhounds stand very high), looked all around him from the reading desk, and attempted to jump over, when the rector laid hold of him, and in the midst of his devotions, cried, "down sirrah," while the scene created nothing but disgust in some, and laughter in others.

Auctioneer. — But when this young gentleman may find himself in a state of spiritual confinement (from the enforcement of the non-residence act), who knows but he may reform?

Meanwell.—Much sign of that; his first job at the rectory was to send for the masons and carpenters one Sunday evening, to build a set of dog kennels for his pointers, and to repair a stable for his hunters; when on the carpenter's refusing to come, his remark was with an oath, "that he could not bear people to be so damned saintish;" and when I told him how disagreeable it was for orderly people to hear the yelling of his dogs all the time of their attendance on divine worship, all I could get from him was, "that it was heavenly music."

[Exit Meanwell.

Enter Mr. Flesh and Blood.

Flesh and Blood.—Sir, I have been so crowded that I must have a glass of brandy before I begin.—(The brandy bottle is brought, and he pours out a bumper in a good-sized glass.)

Auctioneer.—Gently, Mr. Flesh and Blood, I should think this too much for a morning dram; but, however, proceed to your story as to the difficulties which oppose your leaving of your house and living.

Flesh and Blood.—Why, Sir, it has cost me upwards of a hundred pounds for stew-pans, hot dressers, steamers, digesters, and I know not what besides. And then there are the fish ponds, and the stews for my carp and tench; a fine large fat carp stewed in plenty of port wine and gravy, what a delightful repast!—Besides this, I have a large paddock, in which I keep a few deer, and now and then I kill a buck; and a nice fat haunch of venison, roasted to a turn, and eaten over a burning lamp of spirits of wine, swimming in sweet sauce, what a heavenly dish!

Auctioneer.—Dear, Sir, you tell us of such things as are not even supposed to have been found in heaven!

Flesh and Blood.—Ah, Sir, this is not half I was going to tell you of; what a wonderful large tribe of ducks and chickens, geese and turkies, pea-fowl and guinea-fowl, I must leave behind me, unless I take them with me. I have been looking at them a thousand times with sad regret; and once it made me sadly afraid I should never live to eat them all up.

Auctioneer.—Why to be sure, they would make a strange hissing and cackling, and quacking, if you was to pack them up and convey them all together to your rectory in a large covered waggon; perhaps this may make another job for some of us Auctioneers, if you was to sell them where they are, and get fresh ones at your new living.

 Flesh

Flesh and Blood.—Aye, Sir, perhaps I might do so; but, oh! the game! the game! Surely, no man living ever had a finer command of game than myself. Being possessed of a manor containing a vast track of waste ground, I had pheasants, grouse, hare, woodcocks, and snipes, all at command; besides partridges in abundance. And if they are sent after me at a distance of eighty miles, all cross country road, they will be half rotten before they reach me; and now I must go into that stupid country parish, where there is scarcely a soul that knows how to get a good dinner, or how to eat it.

Auctioneer.—What stupid things they must be, if they don't know how to dress and eat their dinners!

Flesh and Blood.—Poh! poh! you know what I mean; but I shall have this for my consolation, I shall be within ten miles of Canon Jolly, and no man living is a better judge of wines; and I never went to see him but he covered his table delightfully; indeed, most of the gentlemen belonging to the chapter of that cathedral, are almost as conversant in the art of good living, as Canon Jolly himself.

Auctioneer.—I dare say, Sir, your being well acquainted with that Chapter, will give you more pleasure than you can find in any chapter in that old-fashioned book, called the Bible.

Flesh and Blood.—Why have we not enough of that, Sunday after Sunday, at church? Give me Ectons Thesaurus, and the Complete Art of Cookery, and let those take to the Bible who like it best. However, in my removal, I shall be something nearer to the sea; and, oh! what a delightful turbot Canon Jolly sent me the last time I went to visit my living, and to raise my tithes. Nothing can be more delicious than a fine turbot and lobster sauce, excepting a well-dressed turtle; there is the calipash and the calipee, and the green fat; I should think nothing of travelling twenty miles any time to enjoy such a charming repast.

Auctioneer.—Come then, Sir, cheer up, I dare say you and the Canon will find something to comfort your hearts in your own way.

Flesh and Blood.—But who will give me an equivalent for the loss of all my charming wall-fruit? There are my peaches and nectarines. Oh, what delightful melters! And there's my melons, my pine-apples, and my grapes—why Smyrna itself, scarcely produce better.

Auctioneer.—But what a pity it would be if you was to be called out to visit some of your parishioners, in their departing moments, or to christen a dying child, just as a fine fat goose, or turkey, or roasted pig, was frothed up ready to come to table?

Flesh and Blood.—This reminds me of another trouble; O, that beautiful little sow! what delightful roasters she produces, and she is now with pig; but she must be sent after me to the rectory. What, do my parishioners think I should be such a fool to spoil my dinner to wait on them?

Auctioneer.——But supposing they should die in the interval?

Flesh and Blood.—Why, then, God rest their souls, I say.

FEAST

FEAST OF WIT.

NOVELTY.—A lady, in a provincial paper, states, "she has had stolen a black ass, of a very large and beautiful kind; and if any gentleman, or his groom, should meet any asses upon the road, she requests them to look at them, and if they should answer her description, to inform her of it immediately.

Recipe by which every Woman may see an Angel.—By looking into her glass.

ADVANTAGE OF SILENCE.

Dear Bell, to gain money, sure silence is best,
For dumb bells are fittest to open the chest.

AN old Lady having sent for her physician on her feeling herself indisposed, begged him to inform her what was the matter with her.—"O! a very trifling complaint," replied he; "I think, my dear Madam, you are now—eighty-five."

A GENTLEMAN who fancied he had a turn for public speaking, never failed at all public dinners to propose something; then he bought a qualification in the India House, till at length having tired the patience of the whole town, he became a member of a Bible Society, because then, he said, "It would be wicked not to hear him."

LITERATURE!—A short time since, a respectable tradesman, of Chester, entertained his friends with his usual hospitality.—After supper, a gentleman introduced the subject of the sudden and much-lamented death of the heir apparent of an ancient family in an adjacent county; after passing some very high encomiums upon his amiable widow, he observed she had been a virtuous and prolific companion, in bringing him so beautiful and numerous a family.—"Pooh!" said a learned Alderman present, remarkable for his spirited observations, "we have many superior in Chester, why, there's Mr. Thing-a-me's wife, and Mr. What-do-you-call-um's wife, and my own wife, are all as good, profligate women, as any in England!"

A LADY asked an old uncle, who had been an attorney, but left off business, what were the requisites for going to law; to which he replied: "Why, niece, it depends upon a number of circumstances. In the first place, you must have a good cause; secondly, a good attorney; thirdly, a good counsel; fourthly, good evidence; fifthly, a good jury; sixthly, a good judge; and lastly, good luck."

A GOOD PLACE.—A few days ago, a gentleman met a young man, son of a tenant of his in the country, whom he congratulated on his good appearance, and inquired what situation and service he was in. "O! thank your honour," nour," said the man, "I am my Lady ——'s own footman, and have only her own business to do, when my Lady rings her own bell!"

Oxford Address.—A gentleman observing a very fat man in a gown at the end of St. James's-street, inquired of a chairman, who the person was?—"Plase your Oonor," cried the chairman, "he has been carrying something to the Prince; but by the make of the jonman, it can't be of any great weight!"

Being asked by the attorney why he made such an unusual provision, he answered, if she does no better for her second husband than she has done for me, I am sure she will have occasion for it.

To the Editor.—Sir, Riding to Highgate two or three years since, my attention was drawn by a curious new sign, at a small public-house, near the foot of the hill. Had I seen such a thing at a village in some remote part of the kingdom, it would not have surprised me; but that such a singular sporting specimen should be found so near the metropolis, appears to me to be worthy of record in your Magazine; and if you should think the same, it is much at your service. H. H.

The sign is newly painted, and consists of a fox, with a crown above his head; underneath the sign, the following words:—

"Saml. Bell, late Coachman to the late Sir Arthur Pigot, late Attorney-General."

A Fox I am, as you may plainly see
A Crown above my head there be;
But that rogue Bell has nail'd me to a tree.
The reason why he nail'd me here,
Was to let all Sportsmen know
He sells good beer.

ASHDOWN

ASHDOWN Park Coursing Meeting, March, 1814.

For the Cup and Couples.

FIRST DAY.

Mr. Wilkinson's Calista, beat Mr. Loveden's Leonora.

Mr. Goodlake's Gambol, beat Mr. Cripps's Crazy.

Mr. Davenport's Dimity, beat Mr. Northey's Nimble.

Mr. E. Cripps's Catch, beat Mr. Isherwood's Idol.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. E. Cripps's Catch, beat Mr. Goodlake's Gambol.

Mr. Wilkinson's Calista, beat Mr. Davenport's Dimity.

Mr. Wilkinson's Calista, beat Mr. E. Cripps's Catch.

Mr. Wilkinson's Calista won the Cup.

Mr. E. Cripps's Catch won the Couples.

Matches.

Mr. Goodlake's Gipsy, beat Mr. Isherwood's Ivy.

Mr. Wilkinson's Clara agst Mr. Davenport's Dottrel, no course.

Mr. Mellish's Czarina, beat Mr. Isherwood's Ipsy.

Mr. Goodlake's Guess, beat Mr. Cripps's Cream.

Mr. Davenport's Dispatch, beat Mr. Wilkinson's Cælia.

Mr. Goodlake's Gulley, beat Mr. E. Cripps's Claret.

Mr. Davenport's Diddler, beat Mr. Goodlake's Gamesome.

Mr. Goodlake's Goth, beat Mr. Isherwood's Johnny.

Mr. Goodlake's Gadabout, beat Mr. Davenport's Duncan.

The bitch Calista, belonging to Mr. Wilkinson, of Suffolk, and winner of the cup, distinguished herself greatly through all her courses; she is grand daughter to the famous dog Mercury, belonging to Sir James Mansfield. It will be seen that Mr. Goodlake's greyhounds displayed their usua excellence.

AT the late Swaffham Coursing Meeting, Mr. Upcher's Platoff won the couples; and out of twenty-three matches that Mr. Upcher's dogs ran, only five were decided against them.

THE Malton Meeting, Yorkshire, in consequence of the severe and continued frosts, was obliged to be adjourned till November in the ensuing year. The only greyhounds that made their appearance on the ground, were Mr. Best's and Major Topham's, and which returned home on finding no meeting.

Tixall Coursing Day.—A number of gentlemen of the neighbourhood coursed on Monday, the 21st ult. at Tixall Park and Meadows, which, from the variety and beauty of the ground, as well as from the abundance of the game, is the best sporting land in the county of Stafford. The latter part of the day was remarkably fine, and many beautiful runs were enjoyed from the elevations of ground, by a variety of spectators. About thirty excellent dogs were sported, some of which are the finest and fleetest in the county.—The late weather has, however, we are sorry to say, evidently thinned the hares in this, their best and most celebrated home.

Pontefract Course, Feb. 24.—Match, the last half mile.

Mr. S. Haxby's bl. h. Nimrod, by Sportsman (the owner) 1

Mr. Muscroft's b. m. Fair Lydia (the owner) 2

Won easy.—Mr. Haxby staked 100gs. to 20gs.

York

York Spring Meeting, 1816.—Last day, Sir George Armytage's Young Wizard; Mr. Lambton's colt, by Wizard, out of Spindle; and Mr. Vernon's colt, by Sorcerer, out of Jet, are all dead.

HORSE AND SPORTING CAUSES, TRIED AT THE LATE SPRING ASSIZES.

(NORFOLK.)—Merest v. Harvey.

This was an action for damages brought in consequence of a trespass committed by the defendant on the lands of the plaintiff, accompanied by much provoking language towards the person of the plaintiff. Judgment had been suffered by default, and an inquiry as to the amount of damages was now heard before the Judge and a good Jury of the county.

Mr. Serjeant Sellon, for the plaintiff, ably stated the case, which was afterwards confirmed by the testimony of the Rev. Mr. Cullum, who had been the companion of the plaintiff at the time the outrage was committed. The substance of the case was as follows:—The plaintiff was shooting on his estate at Lynford, on the 8th of September last, with his friend, Mr. Cullum, when he was familiarly accosted by the defendant, who appeared to be travelling on the road, and had with him a friend, a curricle, and a servant, and who proposed joining the plaintiff's party. The plaintiff observed, that he (the defendant) being a perfect stranger to him, he must decline giving him permission to join, being engaged in company for a day's shooting. To which the defendant said, "Oh! you wont, wont you? Then I'll be damned if I don't shoot, whether you will or no."

The Plaintiff then said, if he did, it was at his peril, desiring to know his name, and offered him a written notice, which he refused. The defendant then delivered the plaintiff his card of address, and went to his curricle, and got his gun, and proceeded to hunt up game with his dogs, and to shoot in the face of the plaintiff and his party. After ten or a dozen shots, the defendant very modestly turned round to the plaintiff, and said, as his shot was all out, perhaps the plaintiff would supply him with a few charges, and on his being refused he returned to his curricle, supplied himself, and again proceeded to shoot. On being again offered a notice by the plaintiff, he said plaintiff did not know his business, and nothing would give him so much pleasure as to have the affair brought into Court, and he would give the defendant 50l. if he would bring it into Court, adding, "You don't know who I am, Sir; I am a Member of Parliament, and a Magistrate of the county of Essex, and if you don't hold your tongue, I'll commit you."

Mr. Robinson, as Counsel for the defendant, disclaimed all intention of throwing the smallest culpability on the conduct of the plaintiff, or any wish to discredit or impeach the respectable testimony which had been adduced in support of his case, but with much eloquence and ingenuity, endeavoured to impress on the minds of the Jury, that this was a case which would not warrant excessive damages either in a legal or moral view of it. There were two modes, the learned Counsel observed, of bringing an offender into Court, namely, by criminal indictment, upon which the quantum of punishment was governed by the degree of misconduct proved, or by a civil action for damages sustained by the complainant party, upon which a Jury was called upon, to enquire what actual injury was sustained by the party seeking redress, and to assess the damages accordingly. In the present case the latter mode had been adopted. If therefore the plaintiff's lands had sustained any injury by the trespass so unwarrantably committed by the defendant, in an unguarded moment of inebriety, undoubtedly the latter was liable in special damages, but could it for a moment be supposed that a gentleman of the high respectability of the present plaintiff could have in view a pecuniary recompence for the breach thus committed, or ought it rather not to be inferred, that his objects were to assert his privileges over his own property, and to proclaim the conduct of the defendant as an example to others? For these purposes he submitted that little more than nominal damages would be sufficient, which would fix upon his client, not only the costs incurred on his own part, but also those of the plaintiff.

His Lordship observed to the Jury, that this was a case in which they were not to confine themselves to the actual injury committed, by treading down the plaintiff's grass, but should take into consideration the magnitude of the insult which he had received, and for which no provocation had been given.—Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 500l.

Overland v. Baldwin.

This was a horse cause, which exhibited as usual much contradictory testimony. The defendant, it appeared, had sold a mare to the plaintiff on the 24th of May last, for 24l. warranted sound. The plaintiff had sold the mare to another horse-dealer, a Mr. Baynes, (who now appeared as a witness) under a similar warranty, and she had been returned upon his hands as broken winded, he had therefore claimed his privilege of returning her to his vendor, under the original warranty; but the defendant had refused to accept her, and the plaintiff had consequently taken to her, and had let her out, which prevented his going for the charge of her keeping. His case rested therefore on the difference between her price as a sound mare and her actual value as unsound.—Many witnesses were called on the part of the defendant, to prove that she was sound when sold, and that the plaintiff had spoiled her by turning her out to grass in November. It however appeared the feeling of the Court and Jury that in swearing, quality had greater weight than quantity, and without impeaching the characters of those appearing on the part of the defendant, the negative observations of those witnesses were not thought sufficient to counterbalance the positive and affirmative testimony of a Mr. Sayer, who had discovered the defect in the mare's wind, the morning after the purchase by the plaintiff. Verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 8l.

Mortimer v. Browning.

This was an action under the statute for recovery of the penalty for sporting without a qualification. Mr. Wright, of Kilverstone, proved that on the 22d of October last, he saw the defendant with another person, person, with double-barrelled guns on the witness's lands, at Croxton. —On being accosted by the witness, the defendant said, he had permission from the Corporation of Thetford, upon whose lands he thought he was then shooting.—Mr. Serjeant Frere described the defendant, as a driver of a coach called the Rising Sun, without any more substantial qualification, than such moveable property as he might derive from such occupation, and cast an insinuation, wholly unsupported, of the defendant's having been in the King's Bench prison.—It however appeared, that Mr. Browning was a person of some consequence in Cambridge; being not only proprietor of the Rising Sun, which runs from Cambridge to Thetford, but also deriving an ample qualification from real estate. The defendant admitted the sporting, but justified on the ground of due qualification. He drove his own witnesses (in number about fourteen) down to Thetford, on board his said carriage, called the Rising Sun, and which witnesses appeared principally to consist of his own tenants, whom he had subpœnaed to prove the value of his estates; and his mortgagee, to produce the title deeds, which were pledged for a comparatively small sum, after paying the interest upon which there appeared a much larger annual value than the Act required. Verdict for the defendant.

(RUTLAND.)—Bellamy v. Banks.

This was an action to recover the price of a horse sold by the defendant to a young man under age, who lives at Branston, in Northamptonshire, and of whom the plaintiff, Mr. Joseph Bellamy, was guardian. The matter for the Jury to decide on was, whether the horse had or had not been warranted sound. The dealing took place in the street at Bourn, just after Thorney fair, last September; and Mr. Wilson, a watch-maker at Bourn, before whose shop-door the conversation passed between Mr. Bellamy and Mr. Banks respecting the horse, deposed, that he heard Mr. Banks say, "You understand, Mr. Bellamy, if I sell him I don't take him again: you are to take him as he is. You are not to let that young man ride him here and there and every where, and then return him for lame." After which, Wilson saw Bellamy come from Banks's stable with the saddle and bridle.

Sam. Marshall, who lived with Mr. Banks at the time, deposed that his master said he would not warrant the horse sound. This was in direct opposition to the evidence given for the plaintiff, by Mr. and Mrs. Bellamy, and a person named Porter, who swore that the defendant distinctly warranted the horse "as sound as a foal and as sound as a roach."—Verdict for plaintiff, 29l. 9s. 6d. the price of the horse.

(CAMBRIDGE.)—Piggin v. Vincent.

This was an action brought by the driver of the Wisbech mail coach, against a farmer at Long Sutton, for the recovery of 40l. the nominal value of a mare sold to plaintiff, and 12l. for the expences attending the keeping and care of the animal, which plaintiff purchased of defendant on the 7th October last, and which died on the 12th of February.—The evidence on the part of the plaintiff proved that the mare was not sound at the time of the purchase, and and the Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 52l.

(Essex.)—Bird v. White.

This was an action against the defendant, to recover three penalties of 5l. each, under the 5th of Anne, ch. 14, s. 4, for keeping and using engines for destroying game. It appeared that the offences imputed to the defendant were committed on Sunday, the 28th of February, 1813. On being detected, he confessed his guilt, and took the witness to shew him where he had set springes to catch hares.

Mr. Andrews, on the part of the defendant, contended that the present action could not be maintained. The statute of Anne had first imposed a penalty of 5l. for each of the offences imputed to the defendant. The 8th of Geo. I. had given power to the party complaining, either to sue the offender by action of debt for the penalties, or convict him before the Justices of the Peace. The statute of Geo. III. ch. 30, had imposed a penalty of 20l. upon persons convicted of the offences described in the statute of Anne, if committed on Sunday, or on Christmas-day. Now this offence having been committed by the defendant on a Sunday, he submitted that the action ought to have been brought under this last statute, and not under the statute of Anne.

Mr. Baron Richards said, he was indebted to the Learned Counsel for the ingenuity of his argument; but as he was of opinion that the statute of Geo. III. ch. 30, did not expressly repeal the statute of Anne, the action might still be brought under the latter statute.

Mr. Andrews requested the Learned Judge would make a note of his objection, in case he should be advised to agitate the question in another place.

The Jury then, under the direction of the Learned Judge, found a verdict for only one penalty; the Counsel for the plaintiff being content to take such a verdict, conceiving it would produce the good effect of deterring others from committing similar offences.—Verdict for plaintiff, damages 5l.

A bag fox was turned out on Friday, the 6th inst. beyond the Talbot Inn, on the Cannock Road, Staffordshire, and run by the Tuddesley Hounds. Reynard made for Cannock Heath, at his leisure, and remained in sight till the dogs came up, when he burst off for Bunker's Hill, where he was turned. He then run off, in fine style, over a variety of ground, and approaching the Canal, he was again turned, when he made for Acton, and escaped, after a brisk run of two hours and twenty-two minutes.

On Thursday, the 5th inst. the Carlisle pack, joined by the pack of Mr. Oliphant, of Itonfield, had a fine day's sport. The gentlemen, in their superb uniform, and well mounted, made a very handsome appearance. Previous to their setting out, they partook of a very elegant breakfast, given by Mr. James Fairbairn, at Blackhall-hall—and, on their return from the sports of the field, were regaled by the same gentleman with a cold collation; when the afternoon was spent with the conviviality that is characteristic of the sons of the chase.

On Thursday, the 5th instant, the Glynn hounds unkennelled a fine old fox in Dunmeer Wood, near Bodmin, Cornwall, and after an an excellent run of about three hours, reynard took shelter in a drain, near the Town's End Turnpike Gate, whence he was dug out after some hours exertion, and borne off in triumph amidst a vast number of spectators.

The severity of the frost having abated, the Prince Regent's stag hounds met on Friday, the 18th instant, at Virginia Water, and after a most excellent run of an hour and a quarter, took the stag near Fangrove. Many of those who have taken tickets for the King's hundred have as yet been unable to complete their number, from the unusual interruption occasioned by the severity of the weather.

An Officer, who arrived lately at Exeter, from Lord Wellington's army, says, that during the late unfavourable weather and bad state of the ground which impeded the progress of the army, two or three packs of fine hounds afforded the officers some pleasant and active recreation; on one occasion the Noble Marquis, with several officers, had a grand fox-hunt, when, after a long chace, and when Reynard was upon the point of surrendering at discretion, he suddenly dashed through the French picquets, and by this unexpected manœuvre eluded his pursuers, and secured his retreat.

On Friday, the 25th ult. a bag fox was turned out at the White Bear, near Kildwick, Yorkshire, before the united packs of Keighley hounds and those of John Garforth, Esq, of Steeton. Distancing the hounds at starting, he took to the banks of the Aire, which he pursued until he came opposite Howden Park; then crossing the river, and the canal, endeavoured to earth, bnt, disappointed, took the country as far as Upwood, the seat of William Busfeild, Esq. when being headed, he run in fine style to the new enclosures above Silsden. Headed again he run back to Upwood, then took back north to Double Stones, looking down to Addingham; then taking an easterly direction he pushed on to the Lumps (the head-quarters of his family), but being hotly pressed, he crossed down into Wharfdale, near to Hollin Hall, where, excessively fatigued, reynard took refuge in a pig-stye, near Ilkley, and was safely taken up by John Calvert, servant to Thomas Chamberlain, Esq. of Skipton, he having rode the celebrated hunter Sir Thomas, belonging to the last-named gentleman; the length of the chace could not be less than twenty-five miles. Mr. Pickup, of Barnley, who was in at the refuge, rode a favourite hunter by Warrior.

Pedestrianism.—Field, the pedestrian, has undertaken to walk one thousand miles in as many successive hours, to commence some time in April, for five hundred guineas, with Mr. Hewett; a deposit of twenty pounds by each is made.

Captain Grant, a pedestrian, undertook on Tuesday, the 15th inst. on the Stanmore Road, Middlesex, to go a mile in five minutes and fifteen seconds. He accomplished his task in five seconds within the given time.

Hopping.—A young man of Nottingham, of the name of Alvey, undertook, for a small wager, on Tuesday, the 22d ult. to stand on on one foot twenty minutes, and then, without setting the other foot on the ground, or touching the leg or foot on which he rested, to hop one hundred yards at fifty hops. Though the wager was small, many bye bets were pending; and, in the afternoon, he went with his friends to the race ground, to put his strength and agility to the test. He rested the prescribed time on one foot, and then took off his coat, waistcoat, and one shoe, resting entirely on the same foot; and sprang off to perform the last condition of the wager, which he did in forty-two hops. He then stood on the same foot, and offered, for another bet, to stand twenty minutes more, without touching the earth with the raised foot, and go the ground over again at fifty hops; but none dared take the offer.

Skating.—During the late severe weather, the ice was so collected upon the turnpike road, that Mr. Jacob Thompson, of Templesowerby, Westmoreland, skated thence to Penrith, a distance of six miles and an half, in little less than half an hour, which he performed with the greatest facility. After spending an hour at Penrith, and gently regaling himself, he returned home within the same time, being nearly equal to twice the rapidity of the mail coach.

Poaching.—Wednesday, the 22d ult. Sam. Merton, of Wordwell, Suffolk, was convicted before John Benjafield, Esq. in the sum of twenty pounds, being found by Mr. Muskett, of Fornham, with four hares in his possession, taken on the estate of the Marquis of Cornwallis, he the said Samuel Merton not being qualified, according to law, to kill game.

John Weston and Henry Trundell, charged with having maliciously maimed two of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent's assistant gamekeepers, in Windsor Great Park, on the evening of the 8th of February, 1813, and for the apprehension of whom a reward of fifty pounds was offered, have been taken, and are now in confinement for re-examination. One of them was taken in Frogmore Gardens, and the other at Egham.

Cricketing.—On Monday, the 14th inst. a grand cricket match was played on a fish-pond, by twenty-two gentlemen of Lavenham, Suffolk. It excited great mirth, as scarcely one amongst the party escaped a fall, and some experienced a ducking.—First innings, 24 notches; the second, 25, and not one bye ball.

Fatal Pugilism.—Two young men, of the names of John Stephens and Wm. Clarke, the former a servant, the other a farmer, on their way home from Tewkesbury fair, on the 14th instant, had a trifling dispute at the Upper Load public-house, and went into the Tewkesbury Severn Ham to decide the affair. It being nearly nine o'clock, and quite dark, they fought by the light of candles; and, after twelve or fourteen very severe rounds, in which Stephens appeared to have somewhat the advantage, he, immediately on jumping up from his second's knee, and advancing towards his adversary, exclaiming "here I am!" fell flat on his back, and instantaneously expired! An exulting cry was now raised by his antagonist's tagonist's party, that he had fallen without a blow; but they soon discovered, to their confusion and alarm, that he fell not without a cause. It was in vain that medical assistance was directly resorted to—he bled freely, but pulsation had for ever ceased. An inquest was held on view of the deceased, on Wednesday, when the body was opened; and it appearing that he died in consequence of a rupture of the heart, evidently occasioned by his falling on some hard substance, and clearly not from any blow received from his antagonist, the Jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.—The deceased was a very athletic man, in his twenty-fourth year; and it is remarkable that, on being advised to give over the contest, he vehemently exclaimed, "I'll fight as long as I have a drop of blood left in my body!"

A battle was fought on Sunday, the 27th instant, in Stepney-fields, between two anchor-smiths, named Carroll and Wallace, which lasted an hour and a half, and terminated by Wallace receiving a blow on the temple, which caused his almost instant death.—The dispute originated about a public-house reckoning.

Sparring.—Tuesday, the 1st instant, the first spring exhibition of sparring took place at the Fives Court, St Martin's-lane, for the benefit of Painter, a first-rate pugilist, who has won two battles, and is now pitted against Oliver, for the Championship, for a great sum, in a battle to take place on the 3d of May. Cribb, who has left the field open to rising genius, shewed himself to set-to with Painter, and the exhibition, although in favour of the old school, gave universal satisfaction. Oliver, the gardener, and the rival of the Lancashire hero for the Championship, set-to with Harry Harmer, of the Belcheronian school, upon equal advantages; and Richmond, the formidable Black, displayed the perfection of science with Lancaster and another. At the close, neither of the three men whom Dutch Sam had offered to fight, agreed to proposals. Gregson, returned thanks for Painter, and the ring was broke.

A Galloway belonging to Mr. Andrews, of Bird-street, trotted fifteen miles within an hour, on Monday, the 1st instant, on the Harrow Road, Middlesex, for eighty guineas.

Wednesday, the 2d instant, a favourite hunter of Colonel Ram's, having got loose about a mile from Clonattin, Wexford, immediately ran home, and finding the gate of the lawn shut, trotted about an hundred yards up the road, and turning short, took the wall of the demesne in a stand, which he cleared without the slightest touch; it measures six feet high of lime and stone, and eighteen inches broad. The spot where the horse took off to where he landed, is above eighteen feet; the exact place, on the wall has been marked since by a streak of white-wash.

Steeple Race.—A match of this kind, which created much sport, took place on Monday, the 28th ult. from Stortford, Herts, to Coleshill, a distance of twenty-one miles, in a straight direction, between Messrs. Reynoldson, Harbinger, and Duckett, celebrated fox-hunters, for a sweepstakes of fifty fifty guineas each. The ground chosen was in a woody country, with other obstacles of rivulets, enclosures, &c. The sportsmen kept pace with each other the first four miles, when they separated on their different routes, to avoid a rivulet. Mr. Harbinger arrived at Coleshill first, having performed the distance, after many daring leaps, in one hour and nineteen minutes. Mr. Duckett ran the winner closely, and was within three minutes of him; and Mr. Reynoldson, who was supposed to be best mounted, broke down at a leap.

FIVE of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn's hunters were sold at Messrs. Tattersalls, on Monday, the 7th instant, for sixteen hundred and eighty guineas.

COCKING.—A main of cocks, betwixt Oxfordshire and Middlesex, was fought at the Midgham Pit, on Monday, the 9th instant, for 100gs. the main, and 20gs. a battle. Eleven battles were fought, seven of which were won by Middlesex: there were also several bye battles.

A grand pigeon match for one hundred guineas aside, took place in Knavesmere Meadows, Middlesex, on Monday, the 14th inst. betwixt a keeper of the name of Shakell, and Mr. Walkden, one of the best shots in the county of Herts; which was won by the keeper bagging ten birds out of eleven, while Mr. Walkden bagged only nine. Betting was six to four on Mr. Walkden, who had many cross birds.

ON the 4th inst. two of the most extraordinary shots ever recorded were made in the Park at Stainborough Castle, the seat of Henry Vernon, Esq. near Barnsley, by Isaac Naylor, the gamekeeper, at a distance of eighty yards. Disputing about a gun twenty three inches long, a person held his hat upon his head, the breward against his forehead, with the open part facing him. The keeper immediately shot at arm's length, and the ball went through the middle of the crown. The person who held the hat, not suspecting the keeper shooting, was extremely affrighted for some minutes, but said he would stand in the same position again if the keeper durst shoot. The keeper immediately shot within one inch of the first shot.

OBITUARY.—Lately died in the 77th year of his age, William Hunt alias Bijou, a most singular character, and well known as travelling with his ass and dogs.

On Saturday, the 5th inst. died, at Droxford, Hants, Thomas Blackman, aged 84, many years groom to Francis Marsh, Esq. Thomas Blackman was remarkable in the neighbourhood for his attention to a horse belonging to Mr. Marsh, which died a short time since at the great age of forty-nine years, Died, at Winsford, Somersetshire, at the advanced age of 88, John Peppin, Esq. a veteran of the stag hunt.

This month died, at a village near Rotherham, in Yorkshire, William Somerville, Esq. While out shooting, as he was getting through an aperture in a thorn-hedge, in the act of jumping across the opposite ditch, his foot got entangled in a slip of thorn that was fast in the hedge, and he fell, and struck his head against a stump that that grew out of the bank so violently, as to cause a contusion of the brain, of which he became a victim in a very little time.

On the 12th inst. John Mill, Esq. of Bideford, whilst on a shooting party with some friends, unfortunately met his death in consequence of one barrel of a double gun going off, whilst in the act of loading the other, which lodged its whole contents in his chest: he was a gentleman deservedly lamented by all his friends and acquaintance.

A BATTLE was fought on Tuesday, the 29th instant, at Moulsey, Surrey, between Martin, a Jew, and a baker named Knoulsworthy. The contest lasted thirty-six minutes, and some good fighting was displayed, when Martin gave in, severely beaten. Knoulsworthy is the best man of his weight of the day. More battles were intended, but for the interference of the Magistrates.—(We shall give a more detailed account of this battle in our next Magazine.)

TUESDAY morning, the 15th instant, the inhabitants of Winchcomb, Gloucestershire, were alarmed by a very unusual noise in the dog-kennel of Mr. Ashmore; the huntsman going to ascertain the cause, on entering the kennel was furiously attacked by a large black lurcher dog, which he beat off with a fork, and afterwards shot. It has been discovered that the dog was mad, and came from Woodmancote, in that county: it has bitten the greater part of the dogs in the kennel, in consequence of which sixteen couple of the best harriers in the country must be destroyed.

CHARLES III. of Spain, attached such importance to his exploits as a sportsman, that he kept in a diary a regular account of the victims to his skill. A short time before his death, he boasted to a Foreign Ambassador, that he had killed with his own hand 539 wolves and 5323 foxes; "so that you see," said he, with a smile, "my diversion has not been useless to my country." There were but three days in the whole year in which he did not go a shooting; on those three days, however, his temper was observed to be rather out of order.

A MOST remarkable snipe, weighing $9\frac{1}{2}$ ounces, was shot by a gentleman on Saturday, the 19th instant, in a meadow belonging to J. Aylward, Esq. at Exton, Hants. The wings measure from tip to tip 2ft. 4in. the beak $4\frac{1}{4}$ inches; the legs, to the feathers on the thigh, $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches; and from the top of the beak to the top of the toe, 1 foot 11 inches.

ONE morning, during the late inclement weather, nineteen wrens were found dead on the snow, near a cottage on the estate of Dun, in Forfarshire. Like the French cavalry, in the memorable retreat from Moscow, the little sufferers had crowded together in a circle, endeavouring to preserve the vital heat.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

ANY THING'S FUN IN THE COUNTRY.

A Song, by an Old Country Sportsman.

"ANY thing's fun in the country," you know,
Or else in rainy weather
What would we poor rustics do,
For weeks and weeks together;
We laugh, we drink, we dance, we sing,
And away dull care to the devil we fling,
For any thing's fun in the country.

Awak'd at six, the Squire cries,
"Well, Robert, what's the weather?"
"Oh, Sir, it rains," the man replies,
"Then draw the curtains together;
For if I can't hunt, I'll sleep again,
So shut the door, and call me at ten,"
For any thing's fun in the country.

After breakfast, the parson he comes in,
From a christening dripping wet,
They talk of the news, backgammon propose,
And down they quickly set;
The Parson's a deep-one, and fleeces the Squire,
Who curses the dice, throws the box in the fire,
For any thing's fuu in the country.

Shall we go to the stable?—what say you? agreed—
And away they walk together with speed,
The state of the stud run over;
Secure from wind and weather;
They settle to meet on the next hunting day,
Examine the corn, and smell to the hay,
For any thing's fun in the country:

O'er spavins and windgalls they gravely discuss,
To pass the time away,
"Shake up the litter, Tom, under yon horse,
"Not that, I mean the bay;"
"Reach me the scissars, Jack, down from that shelf,
This grey horse wants trimming, I'll trim him myself,"
For any thing's fun in the country.

After dinner the bottle goes quickly round,
Madeira, Port, and Sherry,
Without the roof the Tempest roars,
Within each heart is merry;
Then who would be puzzled to pass time away,
Or want a resource 'gainst a cold rainy day,
When any thing's fun in the country.

The storm grows louder, now louder the laugh,
Draw closer round the fire,
And whilst the wind whistles a bumper we'll quaff,
To the lass we most admire;
We laugh, we drink, we dance, we sing,
And away dull care to the devil we fling,
For any thing's fun in the country.

SPLEEN.

WHAT infirmities humble, anxieties vex
The frail race of man, in no station secure,
Or poverty galls him, or riches perplex,
Or error entangles, or vices allure!
Who is there, long travell'd in life's miry way,

That wishes to tread o'er his footsteps again?
And who to the future extends his survey,
But expects better roads, and expects them in vain?
At a haven of rest from the troubles of life,
From anguish and grief, from torture and pain,
From labour and tumult, from envy and strife,
Death points with a smile to his peaceful domain:
But his smiles are so ghastly, so horrid his form,
So dreary his regions of silence and night;
That contented to live, and to weather the storm,
We shrink with disgust and dismay from the sight.
Can the tree which is fell'd produce blossoms and fruit?
With the sap that sustains them they flourish and die;
So the channels once clos'd, which sensation recruit,
No stores of delight or instruction supply:
By the fair scenes of nature the eye is not cheer'd,
The grape has no flavour, the rose no perfume;
The sweet voice of friendship no longer is heard,
Nor pleasure nor wisdom is found in the tomb.
As when some deep cavern's recess is explor'd,
Unpierc'd by those beams which the universe cheer,
Fancy aids the dim light which the torches afford,
And shapes wild and monstrous on all sides appear:
So Death's shadowy vale, when we travel along,
And hope sheds a faint ineffectual ray,
Of forms an ideal disorderly throng
Haunt our dreams in the night, and our thoughts by the day.
Beyond lies a passage tremendous and steep,
Which whoe'er has once pass'd, never passes again:
Perhaps, unmolested by visions, O Sleep!
Here nothing and thou spread your ample domain.
Ye Pow'rs most obscure, yet most antient of all,
From you man's first dawn of existence arose,
On earth for a while sent to flutter or crawl,
And again in your bosom, perhaps, to repose.—
Thus reason'd Philander, in splenetic mood,
And sooth'd, by lamenting his cares and his sorrow;
But life's gilded prospects rejoicing he view'd,
When spirits and health were restor'd on the morrow.

BIOGRAPHICAL MEMOIR OF HELEN.

(From "Posthumous Parodies," lately published.)

PRINCESS Helen was born of an egg,
And scarcely ten years had gone by,
When Theseus, beginning to beg,
Decoy'd the young chicken to fly;
When Tyndarus heard the disaster,
He crackled and thunder'd, like Ætna,—
So out gallop'd Pollux and Castor,
And caught her a furlong from Gretna,
Singing, rattledum Greek Romanorum,
And hey classicality row,
Singing, birchery floggery bore 'um,
And fol de rol whack rowdy dow!

The newspapers puff'd her each day,
Till the Princes of Greece came to woo her;
Then, coaxing the rest to give way,
She took Menelaus unto her.
So said they, "Though we grieve to resign,
Yet, if ever you're put to a shift,
Let your Majesties drop us a line,
And we'll all of us lend you a lift,
With our rattledum Greek, &c.

Menelaus was happy to win her,
But she found a cure for his passion;
By hobbing or nobbing at dinner,
With Paris, a Trojan of fashion.
This chap was a stylish young dog,
The most jessamy fellow in life;
For he drank Menelaus's grog
And then, d—mme, made off with his wife,
Singing, rattledum Greek, &c.

The

The Princes were sent for, who swore,
They would punish this finicking boy;
So Achilles, and two or three more,
Undertook the destruction of Troy.
But Achilles grew quite ungenteel,
And prevented their stirring a peg,
Till Paris let fly at his heel,
And he found himself, laid by the leg.
With his rattledum Greek, &c.

The Grecians demolish'd the city,
And then—(as the poets have told)—
Dame Helen might still be call'd pretty,
Though very near sixty years old.
Menelaus, when madam was found,
Took her snugly away in his chaise—
So, Troy being burnt to the ground,
Why, the story goes off with a blaze,
And a rattledum Greek Romanorum,
A hey classicality row,
With a birchery floggery bore 'um,
And fol de rol whack rowdy dow!

A NEW HUNTING SONG,

Written by an Old Sportsman, on a celebrated Hunt, in the neighbourhood of Ivy Bridge, in Devonshire. Adapted to the same tune as "The Careful Wife," to which it has often been sung with great effect both in public and private.

HARK, hark, I hear the huntsman's horn,
To horse my lads away,
For *Hanger Down the chearful morn,
Invites without delay;
To hunt the hare, whilst rosy health,
Awaits us in the field,
A blessing far beyond all wealth,
Our sport is sure to yield.
Yoicks, yoicks, yoicks, tantivy, tantivy, so ho,
O'er hill and dale with hearts right gay,
Hark, tantivy calls! away, away!

Rouse, rouse, my boys, Aurora's beams,
Illumine yonder sky,
Now quit your slumbers, and your dreams,
And o'er the hills we'll fly;
Hark, that's a "walk," to "Bounty" go,
Hold hard, don't ride so fast,
Try round, try round, hark, hark, So-ho,
Sly puss is found at last.
Yoicks, yoicks, yoicks, &c. &c. &c.

See puss now start from Blatchford† vale,
Quick after her we'll bound,
And winding thro' the echoing vale,
The merry horn shall sound;
Hark forward now to Harford Moor,‡
Quick round by Hall§ she flies,
There turns, and doubles, o'er and o'er,
Till seized upon she dies.
Yoicks, yoicks, yoicks, &c. &c. &c.

Return'd to Slade,‖ with bosoms light,
These pleasures we admire,
We'll crown with generous wine at night,
And drink "God bless the Squire;"
Next hunting morn, o'er Stall-Moor hills,‡
With hearts like sportsmen gay,
Again we'll rout all mortal ills,
And follow "hark away."
Yoicks, yoicks, yoicks, &c. &c. &c.

BACCHANALIAN.

GIVE me wine, give me wine, 'tis all I implore,
With the friend I esteem, or the girl I adore:
Companions I'll find, and these jovial ones too,
So long as a bottle I place in their view.

In social enjoyment, my hours I would pass,
With my jolly acquaintance, my friend, or my lass:
At the evils of life I shall never repine,
While care I can drown in a bumper of wine.

Good wine gives us vigour, it makes the heart bold,
'Tis the fire of the youth, and the balm of the old.
Its virtues are purest, the quicker it flows;
It strengthens our friendship, and lessens our foes.

* Hanger Down, near Ivy Bridge, in Devonshire, and is celebrated for being excellent hunting ground.

† Blatchford House, the seat of Sir John Rogers, Bart.

‡ Harford Moor, this is a branch of Dartmoor Forest.

§ Hall, an old mansion, now converted into a farm-house, and the property of Sir John Rogers.

‖ Slade, the seat of John Spurrell Pode, Esq. who keeps an excellent pack of harriers.

¶ Stall-Moor hills, another branch of Dartmoor Forest.
